

RUSSIAN INFANTRY, THEIR FACES SUDDENLY TURNED GRAVE AND SERIOUS BY WAR'S STERN REALITY, REVIEWED BY THE CZAR AT PETROGRAD (ST. PETERSBURG), BEFORE LEAVING FOR GALICIAN BATTLEFIELDS

MELANCHOLY DAYS ARE COME, SADDEST FOR CITY BEGGARS

Hard Times for Mendicant Army, Due to the Police. Jimmy Connors in Correction, "Slats" Despondent, "Shoestring Mary" Gone.

Hard times have befallen the beggar and the profession is not what it used to be. Men who once "made" $5 to $8 a day have been either driven from the streets or are serving sentences in the House of Correction.

Even Jimmy Connors, who was the life of a saloon near Eighth and Callowhill streets, is in the House of Correction, and that grieves James most is that he cannot get out, although he hired two lawyers to accomplish the object.

James got out of the "Correction" twice, just for brief breathing spells. His attorneys argued writs in the courts, but each time James was returned. He is mourned by his valet and his companions. Yes—James, the beggar, has a valet.

In some manner Connors lost both his arms. It happened when he was a child and he does not know exactly how the accident occurred, but it was a lucky accident, he thinks, for since then James has not worked. He had a valet and the funds to keep more or less in state of drunkenness.

Connors is only one of nearly 3000 beggars who in the last few months have been driven from the streets or sent to the House of Correction. He is not the only one who has been driven from the streets or sent to the House of Correction.

SISTERS OF MERCY AND RED CROSS NURSES ARE DOING THEIR BEST TO RELIEVE THE SUFFERINGS OF THIS VALIANT BELGIAN. Belgian and German, men of every race and creed, who bear the wounds of their service on the field of battle, have reason to thank the capable hands that have healed their wounds and given them a new lease on life.

tion" and the police would soon forget their animosity to the men who do not labor.

INQUISITIVE PITTSBURGER. A few weeks ago the Society for Organizing Charities received a telephone message from a young man. He said that he would like to make a call at the society's rooms if he was sure that he would not be arrested. He was guaranteed immunity if he visited the rooms.

He was perturbed by the crusade made against beggars. He wanted to know just what the object of the crusade was and how long it would last. At first he was not taken for a beggar, but he did not keep Von Bevern in ignorance long.

Then Myers said that he had a few habits that would make steady employment something of a hardship. He drank whiskey and to a certain extent he used morphine. He did not want work; he just desired no police interference with his plans.

He was informed that such assurance could not be given to him. Myers thanked Von Bevern for the information, and said that he would leave town. As he has avoided arrest here, it is believed that he kept his word.

When the police began to arrest the beggars in the central part of the city, the opponents of work shifted their scenes of endeavor to West Philadelphia and Germantown, although they continued to live in the Tenderloin. In West Philadelphia they became as numerous as the West Philadelphia Business-men's League took up the matter with the police. Few arrests were made, but the beggars, when seen by members of the league, were warned to leave, and they heeded the warnings.

The case of a woman interested in the business men. She is the woman who hangs with a baby on her arm and for a time was a well-known figure in the central part of the city. She is known as "Shoestring Mary."

She was warned by the society that if she did not keep the child off the street she would be arrested. So, with the baby on one arm and her basket of shoes on the other, she went to West Philadelphia, looking to ply her trade without molestation. The West Philadelphia business men appointed one of their number to investigate her case, as she had won much sympathy as a widow with a baby to support.

Blind beggars are still giving the police trouble. They refuse to go into institutions, for they say that they like family life and their homes will be broken up if they are driven from the streets.

More than 30 blind mendicants have been forced to stop begging. David Kline, who formerly played a small organ at the corner of Fifth and South streets, is trying to get out of the House of Correction upon a writ of habeas corpus. Judge Carr has the writ under consideration, but has handed down no decision.

There are but few of the beggars on the street today. The action of the police and charitable organization has made the life a miserable one. A "pandant" is seen occasionally at night on Arch street. He does not linger long. When he has obtained the price for a big beef stew and a what he styles a "drip" on Eighth or Ninth street, he leaves the district. It is still too early in the fall for the House of Correction to hold out any inducements to the pandant.
