

GERMANS GIVE WAY ON RIGHT AS ALLIES CONTINUE ASSAULT

British Gain Slight Advantage Over Von Kluk's Forces and Repulse Counter Attacks—Teuton Centre Holds Firm and French Fail To Gain.

Berlin Reports Forward Movement of Allies Has Been Checked and Kaiser's Armies Are Advancing Again—Searchlights Used in Night Battles.

Official announcement was made here at 4 o'clock this afternoon that the left wing of the allies is making slow progress at certain points, and that counter attacks by the Germans against the English army have been repulsed.

The official statement follows: The battle has continued along the whole front from the Oise to the region of Woivre during the entire day of the 17th without important changes in the situation at any point.

On our left wing on the heights at the north of the Aisne we have made slow progress at certain points.

Three attempts by the Germans to take the offensive against the English army have met with decisive checks from Caronne.

At Rheims we have also repulsed with great vigor three violent counter attacks made at night. The enemy has vainly tried to take the offensive against Rheims.

At the centre, from Rheims to the Argonne, the enemy has strengthened its position with important fortified works, and has adopted a purely defensive attitude.

On the east, from Argonne to the Woivre region, the situation is unchanged.

On our right wing (Lorraine and the Vesges) the enemy occupies positions organized for defense in the vicinity of the frontier.

The attempts of the Germans to take the offensive near Caronne were evidently intended to force back the allies that had succeeded in crossing to the north side of Aisne.

Caronne lies about 22 miles northwest of Rheims and 21 miles from Soissons on the north bank of the Aisne.

To the northeast of Caronne lies the famous Soissons drill ground, used by the French army, where big sham battles have been fought in the past.

The Germans have mounted searchlights along the bluffs overlooking the Aisne and the river is swept at night to prevent any surprise movement.

The fighting is especially desperate on the left, where the joint armies of Generals von Kluk and von Buslow have been compelled to extend their extreme right in order to meet a flanking movement in force. No news of the outcome at that point is as yet available, but the military experts believe that the most significant developments must soon be reported there.

The French and British artillery has failed to dislodge the invaders from their strongly entrenched positions on the heights along the Aisne and north of Rheims. But on the other hand, the vigor of the allies' assaults has compelled the invaders to remain upon the defensive.

General Gallieni, the French military governor, believes that the battle will continue for some days yet upon the present field, but he feels assured that the Germans will be dislodged when the British and French secure reinforcements of heavy artillery along the front.

The Germans are far from their

The War Today

Terrific fighting continues along the Aisne River, the allies attacking the German defenses. Losses are reported as stupendous, the allies admitting the slaughter of vast numbers.

French War Office announces that the allies' forces are "progressing slowly" and that the British have repulsed the German counter-attacks.

German War Office statements declare that the Germans are "advancing slowly but surely into France," and that the allies' attack is failing. Both offices, however, agree that the gigantic struggle thus far has been of no decisive advantage to either.

British War Office reports admit the allies have been unable to break through the German lines, but claim successes against the German right wing under General von Kluk.

Belgian forces engaged battle with the Germans who attacked a bridge near Termonde. It is reported the Belgians, aided by British forces, have annihilated a detachment of Uhlans near the French border.

Vienna admits that Russian troops have captured Krasiezy, the chief southern defense of Przemysl, which yesterday was reported invested on three sides. The occupation of this strongly fortified position is imminent. The Austrians, according to one report, have withdrawn toward Cracow, leaving only a small garrison to hold Przemysl.

The Austrian War Office discounts the importance of the capture of Krasiezy and reports that the united armies of Generals Dankl and Auffenberg command the line between Przemysl and Cracow. It also states that action is still vigorous along the San, though the Russians outnumber the Austrians 3 to 1.

General Ziegler is reported wounded in the operations near the River San. The presence of his corps in this conflict indicates that some of the Vienna garrison has been withdrawn to reinforce the army in Galicia.

The Servians have abandoned Semlin (the town across the Danube from Belgrade), which they stormed a few days ago. The Servian plan of campaign has been changed and Bosnia made the objective instead of Slavonia. Austrian forces are reported as crumbling before the assaults of the Servian-Montenegrin coalition.

German war office issued a statement declaring that the Kaiser's line along the Aisne had been under terrific assault, but had stood firm. Heavy losses were admitted, but attacks by the allies were declared to have been repulsed all along the battle front.

Italy's entrance into the war is expected hourly. It is reported a messenger from the Kaiser was refused audience with King Victor Emmanuel and that this was the final diplomatic move by the German government. Emperor William is said to have termed Italy's attitude as treason.

King George, in his speech proroguing Parliament, which was not delivered in person, declares the allies are fighting for a worthy cause and cannot lay down their arms until that cause is achieved.

Washington officials were encouraged for the success of President Wilson's plans of mediation by the reply from Germany through Ambassador Gerard. Germany's attitude was regarded as receptive, refusing, however, to initiate peace proposals.

PHILADELPHIA BALL PARK, Sept. 18.

The Phillies made a clean-up of the Pittsburgh series when they defeated Clarke's men today in a hard-hitting contest, 6 to 4. Dooir was forced to use Marshall, Baumgardner and Oeschler to get the decision and the Pirates had Adams and Kuntzeiner in the box.

Marshall and Adams, who began pitching, got by the first round in good style, but in the second the Pirates scored four times on two singles, a double and Oeschler's home run over the left field fence. The Phillies came back in their half and added by a pass and an error, drove in three runs. In the sixth, the locals put across two more scores on singles by Ludorus and Martin, an infield out, a sacrifice by Lobert's double and a tumble by Carey. The final run for the Phillies was tallied in the seventh on a walk. Vogt's wild throw and Craxie's double.
