ELLEN ADAIR STARTS IN STEERAGE ACROSS OCEAN FOR AMERICA

English Girl, Alone but Hopeful, Departs From Southampton After Morning Ride on Boat Train.

The next morning I awoke early in a wild excitement. For all was ready, and I was ready to set sail for America.

I ate a hurried breakfast, my last typically English breakfast for many a long day. The frying eggs and bacon smelled so good, but were too substantial for my excited mood. The stout London landlady forced me to take some toast and marmalade, and I drank a cup of coffee hastily.

Then out to the waiting taxi my luggage was carried, I climbed inside, directed the man to drive to Waterloo Station, and I was ready off. How inexpensive a ride in these London taxis is—our three-mile trip was only 25 cents—and how splendidly that smartly uniformed chauffeur did drive.

Two cases of white canvas, were placed inside the baggage car on a shelf of the narrow aisle, and I sat down on my seat, I leaned forward and studied their faint perfume. No perfume bouquet had been given me, so I took one slender flower from my case and fastened its fresh whiteness in the folds of my cheap little black frock.

On the platform at Waterloo Station beside the early morning boat-train was a strange and motley crowd. Growth Gallicians were clinging desperately to awesome-looking packages, while queer, excited Italians showed their way around the women, boys and landladies with picturesque red scarves around their dusky hair. The first-class passengers had a bliss air, boarded the train immediately, and subsided behind the morning newspaper.

FAREWELL FOR BRIDE AND GROOM
Each carriage was a little compartment unto itself, completely shut off from every other one, for it was not a corridor train. I soon found a window seat in a third-class carriage and watched a small and most interesting group outside. A newly married couple were being "seen off" by a crowd of relatives and friends, the platform was strewn with many-hued confetti, while the air was all the traces of the morning's festivities clinging to various members of the wedding party.

The little bride, the merest child she looked, hung half way out of the carriage window next to mine, while the lanky husband, obviously of the costermonger class, hovered uncertainly in the rear. A stream of delicate bouquets fitted for the great occasion was directed to the blushing maiden and her new-made groom, but she responded to the battle call of the Cockney spirit. Upon her head she perched a crown of white and red confetti. Parisian in intent, but gruesome in effect. The last fond kissings of her friends, both male and female, had set this "champagne" merrily adrift, and the strange aggressive fowl which roosted in her hat now peered inquisitively over one flushed cheek. For upon a crown of yellow straw, now laced with large and flaunting imitation birds-of-paradise held lordly sway. His flaunting plumes of every variety had waved wildly in the rear and at every movement of the little bride caught the unfortunate groom right in the eye.

"Gawd 'elp me now, 'Arrieta Jane," cried a facetious gentleman in the group who, judging from certain slinky gaze and vulgar-gentle air, had partaken of the wedding feast not wisely but too well. "Why, blimey, you'll never let me land in Mexico with that there bloomin' farmyard in yer hat! 'O balled cock-robber!"

A whistle sounded, the train moved silently out of the great station, and soon we were out in the open country once again. I gazed on the young English landscape as we sped along, the green beauty of the fields and woods and dale was fresh and new after a night of rain. "Weeping may endure for a night," said I to myself, "but joy is certainly coming in the morning."

The carriage had only two other occupants besides myself—an elderly lady of uncertain years and of very severe countenance, and a merry-faced young man, who immediately announced that he was going out prospecting and gold-digging in the wilds of northern Canada. It was full of enthusiasm and very talkative.

"My dad is a parson," said he cheerfully, "and he's got the family! And the poor old dad, although he means well, hasn't yet learned to suffer from gold, although it says in the Bible that one should gold him that he shall be conferred upon me the Order of the Bath! Yes, I was boasted out, and here I am! Not that I really mind, in fact, I'm rather tickled about it, you know, because the Old Country is really getting a bit played out, and I was deadpally fed up with my family anyhow."

The merry lady in the corner fixed him with an eye stare. "The subject must surely be a painful one to any young man of right feeling," said she frostily. "To me those statements reveal a man of peculiarly distasteful," and she retired behind her paper.

The youth's face was a study, but he remained unimpressed by my remarks, he was a kindly lad, for he had me a copy of the Sporting News, and I read a brief description of the latest baseball.

BEFORE THE SANDMAN COMES

Green Apple Dolls

OF COURSE you have all heard about green apples; about the trouble they make and that they are fit for nothing but pie!

Now, as a matter of fact, green apples are good for many things besides pie and one of the very best of those many things is dolls.

The first thing to do in order to have some handsome green apple dolls is to collect your apples. If you have an apple tree in your yard that is easy. Or, if you happen to know of an apple tree near your home you can beg for some of the "windfall apples"—they make the very best dolls, but are not good for much else.

Now wash your apples clean and rub them till they shine. Next collect some straight sticks—some two, some three and some four inches long. Then some leaves—and you are ready for work.

Sort out your apples into two lots—the smallest are the dolls' heads, the bigger ones make the bodies. Pair them off the way they fit together best—the littlest heads with the littlest bodies, then the biggest heads with the big fat bodies.

Fasten the heads into the bodies by thrusting a two-inch stick into the "body" apple and then dressing the "head" apple down into the stick. Choose which side of the apple is to be the front and mark a jolly-looking face on the round head—eyes, nose and a smiling mouth.

THE QUESTION BOY

WHERE did the fishes come from? And why won't they play with me? And what makes the leaves turn pretty? And who put them on the tree? And what makes the clouds grow blacker? And why does the thunder shout? And where is the fire—please tell me, When I blow the matches out?

VELVETS AND FURS ARE OF REGAL MIEN IN NEW STYLES

Costumes for Dressy Wear Made of Handsome Fabrics Suitable for All Formal Occasions.

AFTERNOON frocks for this season will partake of an unusually luxurious air. This does not mean they must be unusually costly in consequence, for materials, although possessed of much elegance and great beauty of surface and texture, are woven to produce these results, without adding to their yardage cost very greatly.

First of all, in the category of dressables, are the velvets, of course, real velvets, made in Lyons, deep and silky of pile and luminous with deep-toned colorings are costly fabrics to procure, but velvets woven in our own America, finished with due regard for color and effect, and, more important than all else, their positive wearing qualities, are not costly to procure, and are being used in great quantities for the making of smart frocks for formal wear.

With many women a dressy gown of velvet is the gem of the wardrobe. It must be modeled in not too extreme a fashion, but be related closely enough to the modes of the moment to pass a style muster.

At the same time it should be cleverly designed, for that its chief stylistic characteristics will endure for at least two seasons.

Such a combination of style and practicality at the same time will permit the economically inclined to make over an old favorite with some degree of satisfaction, for both satins, furbies and tulle are comrades in good standing of the regal velvet fabric which formerly were most exclusive.

The most likable combination is velvet and satin. A frock for afternoon wear made of black velvet and tulle de serge satin is illustrated.

Such an excellent suggestion for a made-over dress to be modeled by and at the same moment reflects the newest in voguish values for a new frock.

The sketch will permit a coat to be designed for wear which at first glance appears to be a part of the gown.

This is the illustrative subtlety which the new three-piece mode deprecate the eye of the most astute, for the blouse of the frock is of black satin, the sleeves of which do double duty for both coat and blouse.
