Treaties in Ink Violated, Must Be Rewritten in Blood, So Plucky Little Kingdom Fights Against Great Odds.

ANTWERP, Sept. 1 (By Courter to Ostend and Ma'l to New York.

The little Beigian soldler who elimbed into the compartment was dead tired; he traind his rifle behind him, threw himself into the seat and fell sound asleep. He whe ready to talk when he awaks an hour inter.

"Yes. I was up all night with German prisoners," he said. "It was a bad job There were only sixteen of us to handle 200 Germans. We had four boxcars, and we put 25 prisoners in one end of the car and 25 at the other, and then four of us with "iffee sat guard by the cardoor.

"We rode five hours that way, and 4 expected every minute that the whole 55 Germany to the car would jump on us four and hill us. Four to 50; that's heavy edds. But we have to do it. You see there aren't enough soldiers in Belgium which was written by an unknown to do all the work, so we have to make out the best we can

That's the plucky little Belgian soldler an over. In the first place he's different from most soldlers, because he is willing o fight when he knows he's going to "We have to make out the best we can." Is his motio. In the second place, he's a common sense little fellow. Even while he's fighting he's doing it coolly, and there is no blind haired in his heart that causes him to waste any effort. He gets down to the why and wherefore of things.

really felt sorry for those German prisoners," said a comrade of the first soldier. "They were all decent fellows, They told me their officers had fooled them. They said the officers gave them French money on the German frontier and then yelled to them: 'On to France!' They went on for three days and got to Liege before they know they were in Belgium instead of France. "We didn't want to hurt Belgium," they told us, because we're from Alsace-Lorraine ourselves.

"You see," continued the logical little Belgian, "it wasn't their fatilt, so we couldn't be mad at them."

That is the Belgian iden-cool logic, "Why did you light the Germans?" a high Government official was asked.

"Because civilization can't exist with-out treatles and it is the duty that a nation owes to civilization to fight to the death when written treatles are broken," was the reply. "It must be a rule among nations that to break a treaty means to fight. The Germans broke the neutrality with Belgium and we had to fight." "But did you expect to whip the Germans? Hop could we? We knew that hordes Gomans would follow the first comers, If we had no right to worry about who sold be whitped; all we had to do was to fight, and we've done it the best we

It has been a cool-headed, logical mat-It has been a cool-headed, logical mat-ter with the Belgians, from the start. Treaties are made with lack, they're broken with blocd, and just as naturally and coolly as the Belgian diplomats used fuk in signing the treatles with Germany, so the Belgian soldlers have used their blood in trying to maintain the agree-ments

Attempt Reveals Russian Military Rule in Austrian Province.

BERILIN (by way of Amsterdam), Sept- at Bordeaux says: A dispatch from Vienna states that an unsuccessful attempt was made today to assassinate Count Bobrinski, Russian military governor of Galicia. His assailant was a Ukranian. He fired three shots. one of which struck the Count in the shoulder, before he could be disarmed. The foregoing dispatch reveals for the first time the fact that Austria admits the Russians are in control of Galicia and have appointed a military governor.
