MODERN HOTEL IN ASIA

American Equipment in Hostelry Erected at Cost of $480,000

The opening of the new Yamato Hotel at Dalny (announced in Daily Consular and Trade Reports for July 18, 1914) marks the completion of one of the finest hostelries in the Far East. It was built by the South Manchuria Railway at a cost of $480,000 gold, is four stories high, has $84bedrooms, 53 bathrooms, and is equipped with 2000 electric lamps.

Much of the material and equipment for the hotel came from the United States, including 400 tons of structural steel. Otis elevators, hydrants, telephones and motor fans. From Japan came 10,000 cubic feet of granite and 600 tons of marble. The floor tiles for the hotel were bought in England and Germany, the revolving front door in England, the heating apparatus in Germany and the furniture from Japan, England and Shanghai, Heating arrangements comprise hot air, hot water and steam-heating systems. Ventilation is carried on throughout the building by mechanical means,

It is doubtful if the hotel will pay for some years, but travelers through this part of China will find in Dalny an up-to-date hostelry,

CHEAP BOARD FOR MULES

Lima Liverymen Charge Less Than 48 Cents

a Day In Lima and Callao liverymen who make a business of feeding mules charge 0.60 to 1 libra ($0.29 to $0.48) per animal per day. When the owner boards his own animal, the cost of the feed is about half this price and includes about 15 pounds of "afrecho" (bran), for 0.30 libra (about 15 cents), and 10 bundles of alfalfa, for 0.20 libra (about 10 cents). The cost of keeping a horse or mule outside the city limits or in the public pastures is 0.30 libra (about 15 cents) each animal per day when the grass or alfalfa is green, and 0.15 libra (about 8 cents) when they are fed on dried alfalfa. As of comparative interest, the price at which motor gasoline was sold here during all of 1912 and 1913, as well as at present, is stated to be $3.40 per 10 mallons.

Loew's Knickerbocker

Comedy prevails on the bill for the first half of the week at the Knickerbocker Theatre. To be sure, Edward Clark, in his feature act, introduces enough pathos in his work at times to make it somewhat an exception to the general statement. But the surrounding acts are frankly designed from start to finish for laughing purposes, and attain their end with a high degree of success. To a piano accompaniment Clark gives a number of extremely clever character impersonations, ranging from that of a Broadway chorus girl to a pathetic sketch of a homeless street urchin. The act is novel. Barnes and Robinson, in a piano-singing concoction, keep the audience in gales of laughter from their entrance to exit. There are scores of teams in vaudeville doing acts of the same character, but this couple are above the aver-

Viola du Val has a good voice, also a bad cold, and had to cut her turn short. George Richards and company romp at high farical speed through a sketch. The Casadoes, as comedy tumblers and acrobats, show new ideas, and the Macks prove ingenious if rather strenuous dancers.

FLASHES FROM STARS

Miss Maud Adams had once to play the part of a woman who pretends to be intoxicated. In her autobiography, Miss Adams' mother tells of the incident. "Critics marveled at Maud's interpretation. I remember that they said she was the only actress who had been able to play the part of a supposedly inebriated woman without appearing vulgar and disgusting to refined auditors. That finish was due partly to Maud's she drew in the part. " 'I couldn't get tipsy to do it, because I am not supposed to be tipsy,' she said. 'Yet I must act it so well that the audience, knowing I have not been drinking, must still realize that my pretense is so well done that it will convince my bushand that I have been drinking:

it is betwixt and between." "That's what she worked to gain. She practiced hours before her mirror in her room until she had perfected it so that it alone would

"It was a difficult part for a young, inexperienced girl, but I will say this: even if Maud were tipsy herself she'd be refined about it." Miss Adams returned to New York last week from her home in the Catskills, where she was resting, and has begun reheareals for her coming season, which will be one of the longest she has ever undertaken in point of time consumed and cities visited. In Philadelphia Miss Adams will present J. M. Barrie's "The Legend of Leonora." She will reach San Francisco in time
