THE PHILADELPHIA ORCHESTRA Reallotment of Seats to Former Subscribers Is Completed.

The reallotment of seats to former subscribers of the Philadelphia Orchestra has been effected and the resubscription is the largest ever known in the history of the orchestra. The general sale for the season will open on Friday morning, October 2, and continue until Thursday evening, October 8.

Among the musicians who returned this week was Attilio Marchetti, the first obceist, and Robert Lindemann, the first clarinetist, and Paul Alemann, the second clarinetist. Marchetti was in Trieste when hostilities began and on his return to his native country, Italy he had the unpleasant experience of being under arrest for two days on suspicion of being an Austrian spy.

As the violinists engaged include Fritz Kreisler and Jacques Thibaud, some doubt has been expressed as to the possibility of their being able to keep their engagements with the orchestra during the coming season. The rumors of the death of Mr. Kreisier, who is scheduled will give a musical Sunday evening, October i. enjoyable dance Saturday night at the club- on January 29 and 30, have been denied on no to appear here with the Philadelphia Orchestra less an authority than that of the Austrian Ambassador, while his managers have received word that he will be able to sail for this country during the first week in January. Mr. Thibaud, despite the fact that he is exempt from military duty, has been doing some work on the Paris fortifications. He writes that he will arrive in December and that he will fulfill

FLASHES FROM "STARS"

"It is an open question," says William Collier, 'whether the married man had best take the blame upon himself after a quarrel with him wife and endeavor to smooth matters over peaceably or not. Sometimes the wife is so snippy and indifferent after the poor man's efforts that he regrets having taken this course. I know a young couple of the stage to whom just this sort of thing happened.

"They had been quarreling, and the young husband, regretting it and being anxious to 'make up,' brought a little gift for the wife. "'Edna,' he said, 'come here. Aren't you curious to know what is in this package?" "'Oh not very,' replied as she glanced at the package in question. 'I rather think I can endure the strain. "'Well," he said, coaxingly, trying to win her to good humor. 'It's something for the one I love best in all the world. Now, guess?" "'Indeed!' sniffed Edna, as she started to leave the room. 'I suppose, then, it's that pair of new trousers you said you needed."

Liane Carrera, Anna Held's daughter, advises parental disobedience-sometimes. "My mother insisted last spring I go with her to Paris. ? refused," said Miss Carrera, "and mother didn't like it a bit. Well, the last I heard from her was a letter dated August 12. She wrote it was terrible over there. They have taken her automobile. All the hotels and shops are closed. the schools are made into hospitals and there is no money in the banks. She herself cannot cash a check, and they only allow a per cent. of deposits. She also says there is no way of getting out of Paris, all the trains being used by the Government. So I suppose that as soon as she can get away she will come over here, For my own sake, if I were not so worried for my mother, and if I were sure she was safe, I would sacrifice five lambs to the gods, because they gave me the wonderful inspiration of being my mother's disobedient daughter. If I had been a nice little girl I would be in Paris now, and perhaps may have starved to death."

Johnny Dove, who deserted vaudeville to play here in the "Ziegfeld Folliea" as Honest Bill, has gained at least half his reputation on the manner in which he shakes his feet. Last season at the time of the Ohio flood, when starring with the Al G. Fleld Minstrels, he was called upon to do a turn at a benefit for the flood

"My little act," modestly relates Mr. Dove, "followed the Divine Sarah Bernhardt and preseded the genteel John Drew. While rehearing my music Mr. Drew came on the stage with h's people to rehearse his act. I had never met him and had only observed his stately demeanor as a member of the audience at his plays, and I felt sure that I was annoying him, knowing that dancing shoes, in vandeville vernacular, are termed 'sketch disturbers.'

"But quite to my surprise Mr. Drew was very much interested, and confessed that he had a large perch built on his home in Northampton, L. L. with a special dancing floor. There ha and his valet, an old minstrel man, would rattle off 10 or 20 steps every morning for exercise. Considering Mr. Drew's worldwide reputation for imperturability and calm, I like to affix the picture of Mr. Drew at his morning exercise of jogging and ragging: Imagine him!"

Eleanor Dusc is to retire permanently from the stage. She gives up, so report has it, because she cannot find suitable plays, though her age has also been a factor in hurrying her retirement. She is now 55. She has been on the stage since she was 4 years old. Recently she dedicated a home for actresses in a cypress grove near Rome as her gift to the profession. "To save the theatre the theatre must be destroyed," said Duse once, "the actors and actresses must all die of the plague. They poison the air; they make art impossible. It is not drama they play, but pieces for the theatre. We should return to the Greeks, and play in the open air; the drama dies of stalls and boxes and evening dress, and people who come to the theatre to digest their dinner."

William Gillette, Bianche Bates and Marle Doro, Charles Frohman's triple dramatic star combination, will appear at the Broad in "Diplomacy" later in the season. Mr. Gillette's appearance is the first since his last appearances in his own plays, "Secret Service," "Sherlock Holmes" and "The Private Secretary," at the Empire Theatre, New York, four years ago. Miss Butes has not appeared here since the commencement of her Western tour in the A. E. W.
