EXPONENT OF CLASSIC DANCE FORESEES ITS ULTIMATE ADOPTION

Miss Domina Marini Says Modern Steps Will Lose Vogue, Which at Best Is Evanescent.

"Within three years," said Miss Domina Marini, premiere danseuse, "everybody will be doing classic dances. They are not difficult, and will come into their own when people take time up and learn what they are like in their pursuit of dancing novelties."

ACROSS THE COUNTER

The touch of frost in the air makes the question of sweaters and sweater coats a timely one. It is a garment that has emerged from a very severe form of the purely practical to something quite shapely and beautifully colored, like a butterfly from its chrysalis.

It is true that beauty has its price, and the day when $5 purchased the best sweater in the market might be relegated to the Middle Ages of these garments. There is one at that price, however, that is most attractive. It is a woven mixture of the autumn reds and browns and greens, with the green predominating. It has an angora-like surface and is called Angora cloth.

These are light but warm, and the colors are particularly beautiful. From here the prices soar until the sweater becomes a rare exotic far removed from the sensible, serviceable garment of its origin.

HE DID HIS BEST

At a seaside resort a lady rather got out of her depth, and her screams soon brought to the rescue one of the boatmen whose business it was to succor anyone in difficulties. A low stroke carried him to the spot, and he reached out a muscular arm to grip the poor lady, who was just about to sink. But her frantic struggles just at that moment dislodged her bathing cap, which soon floated away, carrying with it, which was more precious, her wig.

"Oh, save my hair!" she cried. "Save my hair!" "Madam," replied the gallant rescuer, hauling her in, "I am only a lifesaver, not a hair-restorer."

IN QUIET GEORGIAN TOWN HE "FELL IN LOVE" WITH ELLEN LOUISE AXSON AND WOOD HER.

By BURTON K. STANISH
ROME, Ga., Sept. 28.—When some one in years to come writes the life history of President Wilson much of it will be woven around this little city where Ellen Louise Axson-Wilson, the President's wife, was born, and where, on August 11, 1914, she was buried.

EXTREME MODELS EXAGGERATE NEW IDEAS IN FASHION

They Are Sign Posts Indicating the Way, but Do Not Constitute the Way Itself.

A woman who shops with care and who selects the modified styles rather than the extremes runs no risk of finding herself in possession of garments that have become passé after a few weeks' wear.

The shops now are full of overflowing with blouses from the simplest to the very elaborate and from the reasonable in price to the most exorbitant. The tailor-made suit has returned to us, at first unobtrusively, as if afraid of its welcome, but now steadily gaining in assurance.

For morning wear with the tailored suit there are any number of simple blouses made of batiste and fine linen and the thin, soft silk. For afternoon wear and for dress occasions there are blouses of chiffon or lace, or both.

LACE COVERS CHIFFON NOW.

Last season lace was veiled with chiffon, but now there is a reversal, a turning inside out, for the lace covers the chiffon in the new blouses.

This feature is illustrated by the blouse shown in today's picture. The pattern of the lace shows to much better advantage over chiffon than it would over satin or silk.

The collar is high, and it is wired to hold it in position. It is made of black satin, faced with white satin, and the black satin is used again for girle and cuffs.

The sleeve is not only long, but very long. The lace ruffle falls over the hand, coming out from under the pointed cuff, which is ornamented with a motif of some kind.

The wide girle of black satin is treated in an individual way. The inset at the back, which is defined by a piping of the satin, is quite heavily trimmed with the black lace.

Last season soutache or brocade was seen on an occasional silk or chiffon blouse, but this year, possibly owing to its millinery character, it is having a genuine vogue.

Very often the single width is used in quite intricate designs. Again it is seen in rows, set solidly or apart, as one pleases.

The blouse pictured would not be a difficult one to make at home. And an original or individual design for the braiding would give it distinction.

PRESIDENT'S SWEET MEMORIES CLUSTER ABOUT CITY OF ROME

ROME, Ga., Sept. 28.—When some one in years to come writes the life history of President Wilson much of it will be woven around this little city where Ellen Louise Axson-Wilson, the President's wife, was born, and where, on August 11, 1914, she was buried.

Almost every one here repeats at the least solicitation beautiful little stories about the President "love affair" with "Miss Axson." Almost every one knows that the President was formally introduced to her here in the First Presbyterian Church, where her father was pastor for 15 years. And many relate how, beside the Third Street Bridge over the Ocmulgee River, President Wilson proposed to the minister's daughter.

When one knows that the President "fell in love" with Mrs. Wilson here, that he courted her here, that he pledged his life to her here, one can understand why he, as President of the United States, should travel 70 miles away from Washington to bring her to her final resting place.

The President's feeling is believed to be exactly as expressed by his brother-in-law, Professor Stockton Axson, in a telegram after the funeral to the sister of Mrs. Wilson, who was ill in Oregon. "Everything was beautiful. We left sister with father and mother."

BACHELOR SENDS ADVICE ON KEEPING HOME HUBBY

Dealing with the topic of Wife's Dull Round of Household Duties, first discussed in the issue of September 28, many letters have been received. Great divergence of opinion continues. The views of "Hopeful Bachelor" offer a solution to the problem. The Editor of the Woman's Page will be glad to publish letters dealing with this topic.

Bachelor Offers Advice

Madam—Woman's sphere is the home—a very trite phrase, indeed. Is the woman perpetually bound to her four walls by the marriage vows? The modern woman fortunately does not take this archaic view. She is hungry for culture and self-development, the acquisition of which comes mainly from contact with the great world outside, far from her own Penates.

Recently I heard propounded a very workable and rational solution of one phase of the marital problem, whereby the irksome and monotonous round of existence can be much mollified and brightened by an occasional interlude of wholesome relaxation.

This plan does not go to the Havoc! Ellis extreme, but provides for one night of absolute freedom each week, for husband and wife. They may go whither-soever their interest may impel them, the man to his club, the woman to hers, perhaps to some other object of feminine interests. This occasional break in the daily, aye, yearly, intimacy will help to dispel the dread dullness and boredom that hovers about so many homes today, and makes for so many marital mishaps.

As a bachelor, contemplating matrimony, I humbly offer this suggestion for the careful consideration of those already in double harness.

Happy Married Man Writes

Madam—"Appreciative Husband" it seems to me, takes a very myopic view of the duties of a wife. In not taking his wife into his confidence, in not sharing with her his business troubles, he fails to avail himself of one of the most blessed privileges of the married life. The wife should be a mate in every sense of the word. There should be mental accord. Neither should conceal anything from the other. Psychological comfort is more to be desired than physical.

Like "Modern Wife's" Letter

Madam—I think the letter of "Modern Wife" as published in your paper of yesterday, is exceedingly sensible and very much to the point. I only wish I had the courage and the initiative to take up a stand such as she does in the home. My life seems to be one long round of cooking and preparing meals, and if I can find time once in three months to go to the theatre with another woman, I feel very lucky. My husband believes that the wife's place is in the home, and, indeed, I have so many household duties that his belief works out very thoroughly. I have been married for ten years, and have had very little of the gaieties and pleasures that most women of my age enjoy.

MISSION COTTAGE FURNITURE ADAPTED TO BUNGALOW

Soft Dull Finish Preferable for Camp and Enamelled for Seashore. Mission cottage furniture is particularly appropriate in a bungalow bedroom of this type, and, with a wide choice of color and finish, it is possible to carry out any scheme of decoration at a very reasonable cost.

The soft dull finish in the many brown shades, silver gray or sage green, is especially desirable for camp bungalows, while the enamelled finish seems peculiarly appropriate for the cottage at the seashore. Of course, all varieties of this attractive furniture may be used delightfully in the suburban house. The rafters in the room here pictured seem to be part of the furniture and add greatly to the cheeriness and bright effect of the room, the note of color, of course, being in the curtains.

And what an endless variety of color and pattern can be found these days at little prices! Many reproductions of expensive English chintz patterns may be bought for 18 to 25 cents a yard, and the most commonplace room can be transformed with dainty cretonne curtains, ruffled bedspreads and chair cushions made to match. If the wall paper is self-tinted or plain, one may select most any pattern, dashing or otherwise.

If, on the other hand, the paper is figured, a plain material must be used or the effect will be restless, an important feature to consider in a bedroom. Adjustable curtain rods of the cornice type are much more desirable and newer than the rods with the hopelessly ugly balls on the ends. Curtains with a valance ruffled or plaited are always attractive, but a new or rather old idea revived, in the wooden cornice covered with cretonne concealing the rod, on which the curtains may be opened or drawn at will by means of a cord with tassels ends, which can easily be applied, making a very pretty finish.

The floor of this dainty room, in two shades of wood, is a new and good effect, while the sturdy little mission beds complete an attractive room.

Detachage—the Bornot Stain-Removing Process

When your new gown has become slightly soiled around the bottom or when you accidentally drop something on it that causes a stain, send it to us at once. Do not attempt to remove it yourself. Often the effect of the "stain-remover" is far more difficult for us to remedy than the stain. Our Detachage Process, if used steadily, will keep a gown always looking fresh and new.
