WHAT MILADY WEARS

Beautiful Gowns Are Worn at the Teas and Dinners During the Week.

Though the weather has been threatening during the week, beautiful gowns have been worn by milady of fashion at the great number of debutante functions which have filled every day of this busy week.

Mrs. Robert Sewell is wearing a very smart black silk suit. It is made with a short jacket having a vest of white satin; also collar and cuffs of the same material. The skirt is very plain, narrowing considerably at the foot.

Mrs. Sewell's hat is a black velvet turban with a large black egret on the side.

Miss Mary Alice Clay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Clay, has selected a very stunning white serge suit. The suit is semi-fitting, cut away at the front, and the skirt is quite loose around the hips, narrowing considerably at the ankles. Her hat is a small black velvet, sailor shape, with a loose crown of black and white stripe silk. To complete this charming costume Miss Clay wears long drop topaz earrings, which are most becoming with her Titian hair.

A trottetour of lustrous broadcloth in the new shade known as tete de negre, is being worn by Miss Anna Belle Shirk. The cape coat has trimmings of black satin, and from under the skirt, which is full and edged with black satin, peep bronze pumps. A nobby little hat of black velvet, quite close fitting and with an upstanding feather completes the attractive costume, which is most becoming to the fairness of the young girl.

For the warm days of early autumn Mrs. Joseph E. Widener, who has been spending several days in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., has chosen a stunning gown of cool white voile embroidered by hand.

The gown has a wide girde of deep purple, which exactly matches her hat, and the latter, being of velvet, adds the necessary fall touch to the costume. Mrs. Widener carries a smart purple parasol.

Robin's egg blue taffeta in a dance frock is particularly becoming to Miss Elizabeth MacCuen Smith. The skirt has three distinct flounces, each of which has a lace ruffle under it which extends below about three inches. The lace is in a scallop pattern, and gives a dainty touch to the frock. The bodice is made of the blue silk with tiny sleeves.

Folds of lace about the neck and sleeves make a soft finish to the gown.

Mrs. William Paul O'Neill is wearing a becoming evening gown of old rose chiffon. The skirt has a puffed flounce of old rose chiffon embroidered in a gold design. The chiffon also forms the short sleeves and square cut bodice.

A white net frock with a Roman border is being worn by Miss Helen Van Dusen, who is noted for her charming costumes. The skirt is being worn in three-tier fashion, each flounce being edged with the Roman border. An eon jacket effect of the goods is worn over a lace foundation, and makes a particularly pretty bodice. A wide satin girde in old rose finishes the waist line.
