FLASHES FROM "STARS"

William Ingersoll will join the Little Theatre company the latter part of this month, and will play prominent roles throughout the remainder of the season. Mr. Ingersoll has attained considerable fame, not only for his work in this city, but also in support of Miss Ethel Barrymore.

Just 23 years ago tomorrow Hazel Dawn was born in Ogden, Utah, and in celebration of this charming event, the members of "The Debutante" company will give a birthday supper to Miss Dawn on the stage of the Garrick after the performance tonight. Victor Herbert will conduct the orchestra tonight and be a guest at Miss Dawn's party.

Miss Dawn was christened Hazel Tent. Ivan Carlyl, when he selected her for the leading role in "The Pink Lady," rechristened her. Her rosy complexion was suggestive of the sky-flush at sunrise, so the celebrated composer happily renamed her "Dawn."

John Drew's early appearance here in his new comedy, "The Prodigal Husband," in which he has been playing at the Empire Theatre, New York, since the beginning of the present season, is part of a tour said to be one of the longest that even this much-traveled player has ever undertaken. Mr. Drew will play in almost every State in the Union and to end from the Pacific Coast, returning to the East in the late spring of 1915.

Theatrical managers, having a close eye upon box office receipts, are generally not considered members of a romantic profession. W. Dayton Westfarth, of the Walnut, however, is an exception, being nothing less than a poet. To the November number of Book News Mr. Westfarth contributes a Thanksgiving poem, a verse of which follows:

"I thank thee, O Lord, for the gifts which Thou gavest me All through the year that is ebbing away: For each poignant sadness, for each wondrous gladness, That taught me the breath of Thy far-reaching away."

After a career of a half century on the stage, Mrs. Thomas Whiffen will make her farewell appearance in "The Beautiful Adventure."

CONTINUING. ADELPHI—"A Pair of Sixes," farce by Edward Pepple. Two business partners shoot cold hand, the winner to retain the business, the loser to become his body servant for a year. Maude Eburne immitably funny as a slavey.

BROAD—"The Song of Songs," new play by Edward Sheldon. Variations on Sudermann's novel, with scenes in this country.

FORREST—"Sari," charming operetta, with Miss Hajo and Irene Fowlowak. A good plot, better music, an excellent company—and Miss Hajo, just bewitching.

GARRICK—"The Debutante," new musical comedy, with book by H. B. and R. B. Smith and music by Victor Herbert. Enthrallingly engaging music by Victor Herbert. Hassel Down a subjugatingly beautiful heroine.

LITTLE THEATRE—Excellent revival of Sheridan's "The Rivals."

WALNUT—"Within the Law," Catherine Tower convincingly portrays Mary Turner who is unjustly sentenced to prison, but finally triumphs.

MARGUERITE HERTZ "The Rivals"—Little Theatre

which will be at the Broad Street Theatre the week of November 16. While still taking keen pleasure in acting, Mrs. Whiffen's old friends are nearly all either dead or retired, and while she is still a great favorite, she says she misses her compatriots of the old school, as Mrs. Gilbert, Annie Yeaman, Mrs. Sol. Smith Russell and Clara Morris. In "The Beautiful Adventure" Mrs. Whiffen will portray the character of the fond old grandmother.

Henry E. Dixie will appear as Malvoile in the Liebler production of "Twelfth Night" when Phyllis Neilson Terry makes her American debut. He appeared in the same role with Ada Rehan at Daly's Theatre.

MERETRICIOUS THRILLS

Whooping Up the Drama Into Melodrama and Cinema-drama.

With the production of "The Story of the Rosary" at the Lyric Theatre tonight, we shall witness an instance of what seems an indication of uncertainty, experiment, maybe transition, in forms of dramatic amusement. "The Story of the Rosary" is a melodrama of a sort long popular in England. Its presentation in this country is significant only as one of a number of melodramatic ventures of the season.

Melodrama, in its shrieking sense, has never been generally popular with theatre-goers. For years the New York Hippodrome offered its colossal spectacles and was a thing to be seen—well, once each year. Sometimes—in the spirit of having a lark—we went to see the theodora-kremer-oven-davis thrillers familiar along New York's Fourteenth street. There seemed no likelihood of an incursion of the blatantly harrowing or awe-inspiring pictorial into the legitimate drama.

At the opening of the season, John Mason starred in an apache melodrama in evening clothes, by Owen Davis, of "Nelle, the Beautiful Cloak Model" fame. We confess to being thrilled, although we knew the thing that thrilled us was fake. "Big Jim Garrity" moved on to New York, but failed to prove a success in a high-class theatre. This, too, may be significant.

Melodramatic and spectacular, "Life" was recently produced by William A. Brady at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, in a manner outdoing the achievements of Drury Lane. With the plot revolving about the adventures of a college athlete wrongfully suspected of murder, "Life" depends for its effects chiefly upon amazing scenic settings and moving pictures supplementing the stage action.

Illustrating the adventures of the chief protagonists, moving pictures also supplement the action of "The Battle Cry," another melodrama, which has opened at the Lyric, New York. Unlike the old-fashioned shockers, "The Battle Cry" is elaborately made up of 15 scenes, replete with rapid-fire moving-picture action, accelerated in effect by cinematograph reels showing dizzy dangers and adventures. Herein is the difference between the new melodrama and the old. There has come what might be called the cinema-drama.

Do these productions indicate dissatisfaction on part of a sated public with the established, compact, technically constructed drama of life and manners?

Or are managers merely experimenting? In the legitimate drama the effect is achieved not so much by elaborate settings as by the consummate portrayal of actions through a defined, coherent plot. In the moving picture, plot is lost in an impressive picture story. Will the effect of the cinematograph tend to
