REV. DR. D. MACFADYEN. Prominent churchman in London and candidate for Parliament from the West Somerset Division.

Dr. D. Macfadyen, prominent English churchman, in this country to urge Wholesale Transfer of Sufferers.

"Bring Belgians to U. S.," is new plea for relief. Dr. D. Macfadyen, prominent English churchman, in this country to urge Wholesale Transfer of Sufferers.

of the United States, where they would be able to build up a settlement and start life anew. Doctor Macfadyen continued, "It is our hope that the establishment of colonies of Belgians in the southern and western parts of the United States; colonies similar to the Indian reservations where the Belgians could live in communities of their own as a unit and not be scattered in small numbers throughout the larger cities and towns, would be their individuality, personal ties, customs and habits would be lost or assimilated. They necessarily would not have to compete with home labor, but exist on their own resources, trading and working among themselves, intercourse coming with the outside States by degrees until, step by step, they would become interwoven in the life about them."

Offers of lands and money have been made by many persons in this country for the use of the Belgians should they be brought here. Plans are said to be on foot in some of the Western States to put sections aside for the use of those that might be brought over. Doctor Macfadyen will visit government officials in Washington and urge that no obstacles be placed in the way of private capital or charity in bringing the Belgians to the United States. He declared that our immigration laws would have to be made less stringent to admit these destitute men, women and children.

ALL TYPES WOULD COME. Conditions prevailing in Belgium and the fact that England only can supply temporary relief, Doctor Macfadyen said, started the movement to bring the Belgians here. It is not the plan to bring laborers alone, but professional and business men as well. "In effect we will move a town of Belgium to the United States," Doctor Macfadyen said. "The people are thrifty and of excellent metal. Their presence in any community would be advantageous. 'Thousands of the Belgians now in England look to the United States as their one place of hope and future prospects,' Doctor Macfadyen continued. 'They ask, and in many cases clamor, to be brought to the United States. They do not want to return to Belgium, fearing a repetition of the awful catastrophe that has befallen them. Belgium will be the path for invading armies in the future, they believe. They say the devastation of their country will set them back many years, and the indemnities imposed by the Kaiser will be a tremendous yoke about their necks.' 'England's doing all it can for them, but there is no work of a permanent character for the Belgians there,' Doctor Macfadyen declared. 'There are 2,000,000 Belgian refugees now in England, and this number increases weekly at the rate of 100. The problem is serious. These people must be provided for, and that provision must be of a lasting nature. 'What we can do for them is merely temporary. England is settled and thickly populated; the room is taken up. The Belgians look to the vast unsettled parts
