

BRUMBAUGH HERE TODAY RESOLVED TO KEEP THE FAITH

Governor-elect Emphasizes His Independence in Notable Speech at Dinner in Washington.

Governor-elect Brumbaugh will return to Philadelphia today to complete his work as superintendent of Public Schools and to prepare for the session of the next Legislature and for the naming of his cabinet. He will come here from Washington, where last night he declared his independence and pledged himself to carry out the promises he made during his campaign.

The Governor-elect was the guest of Representative William S. Vare at a dinner in the Shoreham Hotel, Washington. The other members of the Pennsylvania delegation, including Mitchell Palmer, who also spoke at the dinner, attended and met the new Governor of their State.

The dinner was an almost open alignment of the Vare support behind the Governor-elect in the efforts which he pledged himself to make to carry out the program he announced during his campaign. Incidentally Representative Vare boomed him for the Presidency.

"When the time comes," said Mr. Vare, in introducing the Governor-elect, "the people of Pennsylvania will offer Doctor Brumbaugh to the people of the nation as a protection and prosperity President. Aid if he should be called to that high office the American people will have reason to be proud of Pennsylvania's gift to the nation."

The Governor-elect made his declaration of independence at the conclusion of a set speech. "I made certain pledges in the course of my campaign," he said, "which, with your help, I hope to see crystallized into law. One of the great things that must be done is to give the people the best justice which they need. I said with your help. But if you do not give me your help, if the men in the ranks desert, I will go right ahead and do these things alone. I want to stand with the majority. But if I stand with the minority, I intend to keep every pledge I made in the course of my campaign. I want to carry out the program of legislation designed to respond to the need of the people of Pennsylvania. I hope I have your support, but if needs be, I will fight alone."

James A. Dunn and John McClintock, Jr., Representatives-elect from Philadelphia, have come out in opposition to the Statewide primary law passed by the last Legislature, and have intimated that they will work to repeal the law in the next Legislature. The law, which was introduced by William Draper Lewis from the Washington party ticket, and the huge cost of the primary campaign, were pointed to by both men as proofs of the inefficiency of the law.

Washington party State leaders have decided to have all of the Washington party measures which failed to pass in the last session of the Legislature reintroduced in the coming session. The Washington party has one man in the next Senate, and one in the House, so that the party's bills can be introduced in both branches of the Legislature. The party will also have a committee in Harrisburg during the session to work for its measures. These bills include child labor, workmen's compensation, and withdrawal of the State from the most of which was drafted under the supervision of William Draper Lewis.

Neither William F. Beaton nor Charles Emery will have the support of the Republican Organization for re-election as Magistrates next year, according to Republican leaders. Byron E. Wrigley has also been placed on the list of candidates, but Senator-elect William Wallace Smith may help him. Beaton has been identified with the Washington party for two years, and may have the Washington party support. John Collins, leader of the 15th Ward, may have the Republican support to succeed Beaton. Emery and Wrigley were elected on the Workingmen's League ticket in 1913.

CITIZENS WANT ATHLETIC FIELD FOR HIGH SCHOOL

Request Made by Cedar Avenue Association to Board of Education for West Philadelphia Boys.

An appeal for an athletic field for the West Philadelphia High School was made to the Board of Education in a communication received from the Cedar Avenue Improvement Association and read at the meeting of the board today.

The association points out that such action by the Board of Education would give the West Philadelphia pupils only the advantages that are already enjoyed by the pupils of the Northeast and Central High Schools.

The Council of the Higher Schools submitted a resolution adopted by that organization recommending that at least one person, qualified by special high school training and experience as teacher and administrator, be included in the Department of Superintendence of the Board of Education. The resolution was declared to be for the best development of the high schools. It was referred to the Committee on High Schools.

Residents of 15th and Fitzwater streets presented a petition asking for a playground adjoining the James Campbell School, which was referred to the Property Committee.

Titles of the following properties will be investigated by the School Solicitor and, if approved, the properties will be conveyed to the School District: 1222 South Margate street, consideration $1800; 1340 South Marshall street, consideration $1700; lot bounded by 51st street, Lyons avenue, 835 1/2 street and Brunswick avenue, consideration $600; two lots, 616th street and Linden street, consideration $800 and $600; lot at 30th street, north of 5th street, consideration $1500; lot at 18th street and Oregon avenue, consideration $2,000.

OUT OF WORK SINCE THE '80s Breaking Rocks at Helmsburg Pay's First Job in a Generation. A steady position for three months at the Helmsburg Institution, where large rocks are made into small rocks, was questioned Charles Pay, no home today by Magistrate Hagerly at Central Station. The man was arrested on a charge of stealing tools.

New look in it since you've had work? Inquired the Magistrate. "I don't know," said the man, "I've been looking for a job ever since I was out of work."

Magistrate Hagerly then took up the case of a man who had been out of work for some time. "I've been looking for a job ever since I was out of work," he said.

EDDIE COLLINS SOLD TO WHITE SOX

Continued from Page One. Instead of some of his other players were as various as the reasons for his retirement policy in general. In the first place, after the Federal League made Collins an offer in Chicago last summer, Mack was compelled to accept a contract from his second baseman which was dictated by Collins himself in every detail. The contract was, as Mack stated, for a "term of years," and while the White Elephant leader did not say so the terms of the contract called for the largest amount ever paid a local baseball player. Furthermore, there had been friction between Collins and Captain Ira Thomas. The cross-purposes of the captain and leading player never reached a climax. At the same time, something of the kind would surely have happened after Thomas allowed himself to be lured to the effect that Collins had given away many of the secrets of the Athletic players in his newspaper and magazine articles.

Considering all of these things Mack decided that it would be beneficial to his club to turn Collins over to another team if satisfactory arrangements could be made. The result was that on last Sunday Mack was to have taken Collins to Philadelphia. Connie Mack, Charles Comiskey, Ban Johnson and Eddie Collins held a conference at the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel. The result was the sale of Collins to Comiskey. It is not customary for a player to confer with his own and his prospective manager when a deal of this character is about to be consummated. But owing to the steadfastness of the contract, which had, Collins' consent had to be obtained before he was bound to play for any manager except Mack.

Ever since he developed into a star performer in the days of the Athletics, Collins has been the by-word for baseball efficiency. He was said by John J. McGraw to be the "world's greatest" baseball player. That remark was made by the manager of the Giants after the completion of the world's series of 1913. That he is the world's foremost exponent of the national pastime is agreed generally by critics. He is not only a batter of wonderful ability, but he excels as a fielder, on the bases and in all-round play, which of course includes the headwork and the game. In that respect he probably outclasses any man in the game today. His quick-thinking on the field in crises of many battles have time and again turned defeat into victory for the Athletics. It did not need the terrific hitting of Collins during the seasons of 1913 and 1914, the chances are that the Athletics would have been beaten out, and probably would have occupied at the finish of the season a position below second place.

On the field Eddie Collins displays as much "snap" as any man that ever played the game. He is not what is commonly known as a "crab," but his attitude in general is well explained by the nickname which the Athletics call him—"Cookie." That nickname indicates that Collins is always ready to look to his own rights and to the rights of his fellow players. That is true. Nothing ever escapes his attention that is occurring during a game, and if he does not think that his club is getting it due he is right after the umpire, not vulgarly protesting, but putting up a logical, though spirited argument. As a kicking against the grain of the umpire on close plays, Collins is seldom seen in that role. He believes that the umpire does what he considers right and lets it go at that.

Collins was at one time one of the most likable, congenial men that ever donned a uniform. He is highly educated and is conversant with more subjects than any other player in the American League. Collins was at one time a Columbia University, where he made an enviable reputation in all branches of athletics. He was a football player of rare ability, despite the fact that he at that time weighed only 145 pounds. Collins last year as a football player was the last that Columbia had a football team. On numerous occasions Collins was chosen by the coach of the football team to go in as a "pinch" runner and he invariably "came through" with the necessary gain.

During the last few years Collins has developed into a baseball writer of rare ability. He writes well, and thanks to his intimate knowledge of baseball affairs, has been able to give the public a remarkable account of several world's series besides special analytical articles, which were at once technical and interesting, a rare combination. Collins is one of the few "player writers" who does his own stuff. He operates a typewriter rapidly and does all of his work at his home in Lansdowne.

The hub of the Athletic infield was born in Millertown, N. Y., May 2, 1887. After taking academic work at a number of schools, Collins entered Columbia University in 1907, where he applied himself with equal diligence to his studies and to athletics. He made the varsity baseball team his freshman year, playing shortstop. He wore the Columbia uniform up to 1904, when he was elected to captain the 1907 team, but did not return to college.

Connie Mack was "tipped off" to Collins in 1904 and had a scout look him over. He was tried out with the Mackmen, playing under the name of "Sullivan." He used that name while he was playing independent and semi-professional baseball in New England during the summer of 1905.

During the seasons of 1907 and 1908 Collins was tried at every position on the infield and also in the outfield by Connie Mack. He did not appear to be a good outfielder, but was often used because of his rare ability as a hitter. At shortstop he did not suit Mack. Finally, in 1909,

FINED FOR SCALING LIVE FISH

Magistrate Decides They Feel Pain and Punishes Dealer. It is just as painful to a carp to be scaled alive as it would be to a human being to have his hair pulled root by root. Magistrate Hagerly decided at his office, 1016 Pine street, this morning, when two men were arrested before him on the charge of cruelty to animals.

John Loden, an employe of John Bekoff, a fish dealer of 610 South 4th street, according to the testimony of Thomas Carlisle, superintendent, and Henry A. Friedrich, an agent for the Woman's Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, did the scaling, but the Magistrate discharged him, holding that Bekoff was responsible for his actions. Loden, it was testified, took two carp from an aquarium at the store on South 4th street and scaled one of them without killing it, because "scaling was easier while the fish was alive."

"Fish have nerves just like any human being," former Fish Commissioner William E. Meehan testified, "although they are not as developed as they are in higher animals, and I do not think they suffer such acute pain. The nerves in a carp are near the skin and the actions of a carp when scaled alive indicate that they suffer pain." Bekoff was fined $10 and costs.

COLLINS TO MANAGE SOX

Athletics' Star Baseman Named as Comiskey's Choice. NEW YORK, Dec. 8.—"Eddie" Collins, of Connie Mack's $100,000 infield, will manage the Chicago White Sox next season, Charles A. Comiskey, of the White Sox, announced this afternoon that the crack second baseman had agreed to sign a five-year contract. Collins is to receive a "satisfactory" cash bonus. Neither the amount of the bonus nor the salary were mentioned by Comiskey and Ban Johnson, who confirmed the deal. Comiskey said that Collins "would have no interference in the selection of his players."

The purchase of Collins by Comiskey will result in a general reorganization of the Chicago Americans. "Jimmy" Callahan, who has been manager of the team, will become president of the club, according to reports here. Comiskey refused to be quoted on this question more than to let it be known that Callahan would remain with the club.

CONGRATULATES DR. YERKES

EPISCOPAL RECTOR CAUSES DISPUTE BY CHANGING SERVICES

Rev. Dr. Yerkes, of Church of the Transfiguration, Criticised by Some Publications, Praised by Others.

Changes made in the form of services of the Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration, 30th street and Woodland avenue, by the rector, the Rev. Dr. Royden Keith Yerkes, an instructor in Hebrew in the University of Pennsylvania, and an instructor in Old Testament Literature and Language in the Episcopal Divinity School, have caused wide discussion in Episcopal circles in this city and throughout the country and in the publications of the denomination. The Church of the Transfiguration, before Doctor Yerkes became rector, was recognized as one of the high Episcopal Churches in Philadelphia.

Because he did not believe that the customs as he found there were in the best interests of the parish and because he did not personally approve of several of them, Doctor Yerkes, soon after he became rector, began to make changes, and there was some opposition. But the new rector, firm in his conviction that the future of his church depended on adherence to his decision, demanded that his course be followed. The change was put into effect gradually in the last year. And in October Doctor Yerkes published an article in the parish publication in which he mentioned certain Catholic customs which he considered "prohibited" and declared that "the members of the parish should consider it a privilege and opportunity to attend all the services of the church."

CRITICISED BY PUBLICATION. The American Catholic, a leading organ of Episcopals advocating high-church customs, published in Los Angeles, upon receipt of a copy of the issue containing this article, immediately disagreed with Doctor Yerkes, and in its December issue published as the leading editorial an article entitled "Erroneous Teaching" in which it criticizes the changes and plans of the new rector of the Church of the Transfiguration. The reasons given for this criticism are stated in this introductory paragraph: With not a little surprise and approval we learn from his own writings, printed in his parochial paper, that the Rev. Dr. Yerkes, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, Philadelphia, has marked his advent into that parish by prohibiting certain Catholic customs which he found in existence there, and by an explicit denial of the obligation to attend Mass on Sunday. The customs referred to are singing the Introit, Gradual and "Benedictus qui Venit" in the Mass, and making genuflection in the Creed (at the Incarnation) and after the Prayer of Consecration) as an act of adoration to Christ in the Eucharist.

The Chronicle, an independent religious journal, published at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in the interests of the Protestant Episcopal Church, praises Doctor Yerkes and recommends that other churches copy his article in their parish papers.

CONGRATULATES DR. YERKES. This paper publishes the article in full under the heading "Discriminating and Positive," and introduces it with the following words: We congratulate the Rev. R. K. Yerkes, S. T. D., upon the manner in which he has introduced certain changes in a parish where we think changes could well be made to bring

It back to the standards of worship and ritual which more nearly approximate the form of worship and teaching of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States. For the edification of our readers we quote the following passages from the Parish Paper of the Church of the Transfiguration of Philadelphia. Following a reprint of the article in its entirety, the editor of the Chronicle ends his article with this comment: We would respectfully suggest all Churches of the Transfiguration please copy and then—some others. What advice if he had any comment to make on the article in the American Catholic, Doctor Yerkes said that, for the present, at least, he did not care to discuss it. "I do not want to enter into a controversy because I believe it was a personal attack," he said. "If it had been a discussion of principles, I would gladly say something about it."

ATTENDANCE HAS INCREASED. Ever since Doctor Yerkes took charge of the Church of the Transfiguration, now a little more than a year ago, he has been making changes, but none of them brought out much discussion throughout the country, although they did cause some dissatisfaction to certain members of the parish. Some of the members left the church and are now attending churches nearer their homes—churches that include their homes in their parish territories.

Notwithstanding the withdrawal of those members who did not approve of the elimination of the high church features, the figures given in the Parish Paper for October show that there has been an increase in attendance at the services in the church. The majority of the new worshippers are within a few blocks of the church, and the attendance is especially noticeable at the Sunday evening services. There has been a growth also in the Sunday school, a troop of Boy Scouts is being organized, and those who approve of the rector's methods are pleased with the results.

The paragraph in Doctor Yerkes' article in the Parish Paper, which the American Catholic criticizes as setting forth "an explicit denial of the obligation to attend mass on Sunday," reads: We should like to suggest that there is one way in which every communicant of the parish can render valuable assistance in developing the parish into a power of good in the community, and that is by regular attendance at the Sunday evening services, unless unavoidably detained. There is no soundness in the theory that we ought to attend some services of the church, and neglect others, and that other services are entirely matters of option, and if anything, works of supererogation. All of the services should be regarded as privileges and opportunities.

Don't Make This Mistake About ADAMS

Some people say "ADAMS goods are high priced"; or, "ADAMS caters only to wealthy people"; or, "ADAMS does not carry the inexpensive article I want."

These people are mistaken. They do not speak from experience. They know that ADAMS is recognized as the highest classed confectioner in this city and they immediately jump to the conclusion that extraordinary quality means exorbitant prices.

ADAMS prices are never higher than others ask for similar goods; in many cases they are considerably lower. ADAMS caters to responsible people; not necessarily wealthy people. ADAMS makes the lowest priced candies that give entire satisfaction.

If these things were not true—if ADAMS prices, ADAMS service and ADAMS candies were not such as to meet the approval of the thousands of satisfied people who buy where they can do best—ADAMS could not have a record of twelve years' continuous growth, and located out of the shopping center.

So, do not let a false impression prevent you from seeing what ADAMS has to offer. Come in, examine their stocks, notice the wide range of prices, compare their values with those elsewhere. Really know ADAMS as it is—rather than what some people think it is—and you will be convinced that ADAMS is the most economical place to buy, price and quality considered.

ADAMS candies are always fresh in sanitary sealed packages and not sold to other stores. They are sold on their merits—not on tradition.

Write, telegraph or telephone your Christmas orders early to insure prompt delivery.
