WITH the holidays close at hand the season seems to have reached its height, and each day brings an unending round of lunchcons, bridges, tens, with the usual accompaniment of dinners and dances. The popularity of bridge seems to have taken a decided slump, for very few women there are who do not inatend prefer to spend their spare time knitting or sewing for the destitute. Teas are different, for, as they are generally given to meet some particular person, they become an obligation, the same holding good of luncheons.

At a number of tens, given during the past week, many attractive costumes were noted. One of the prettlest little debutantes of the season, Miss Mary Denckla, was noticed wearing a good-looking costume of tete de negre. Over a graceful frock of crepe de chine in this shade, she were a long black coat with an upstanding collar of skunk fur. Her hat was of tete de negre satin with an upturned brim and two French plumes flaring at each side.

Miss Priscilla Bohlen was seen at the Bellevue-Stratford the dansant on Saturday afternoon wearing an extremely smart suit of covert cloth. The skirt was severely plain. and over it was worn a hip-length coat with a patent leather belt. Her tricornered hat was black with a flaring black taffeta bow. The costume was completed by a stole and must of beaver. Miss Margaret Megargee Wright is looking well in a plainly tailored suit of black cloth with collar and cuffs of fur. Miss Megargee's bat is a sailor of black satin, the sole trimming being a band formed of a series of gun-metal links around the crown. With this the young girl wears oddly shaped long pendant earrings of dull silver.

Mrs. W. Reynolds Wilson is wearing a smart costume of black satin, trimmed with Gobelin blue, and a large flat hat of satin, trimmed with a wreath of fruit in different shades. Mrs. Henry K. Dillard was seen recently in a frock of navy-blue crepe, made on moyen-age lines and worn with a sailor of dark blue. A becoming two-piece suit of bettle green cloth is being worn by Mrs. Richard D. Wood. The postilion coat has an upstanding collar of sealskin and cuffs of sealskin, and is fastened close up to the chin with long ivory buttons. Mrs. Wood's hat is of black velvet, small and close-fitting, with two very tall osprey feathers rising at the front. Miss Margaret Houston looks well in a dark brown cloth suit. The coat has the conventional mill tary collar, edged with scalakin and fastened down the front with jet buttons. The skirt is plain and made on straight lines. Miss Houston's hat is a close-fitting toque of brown valvat with a fan-tail feather of light brown fastened on the right side.

Miss Fannie Waln was seen in the tearporn of the Bellsvue-Stratford lately wearing a street suit of biscult color cloth. The skirt has a short overskirt and is made on extremely plain ines. The coat is also short and cut rounding in the front. Sable fur is used on the collar and cuffs. Miss Wain also wears a large sailorshape hat of biscuit color felt, tilted a trifle to one side, and trimmed with a fluting of navyblue ribbon. The hat is also faced with ribbon the same shade.

Miss Emily Taylor has chosen a coat suit of black broadcloth and velvet. A yoke of the velvet is inserted below the waist-line, where it joins an overskirt of broadcloth. Below is a wide band of velvet which finishes the odge of the skirt. The coat is of cloth and velves and underneath is worn a blouse of raspberrycolor crepe de chine. Miss Taylor's hat is a medium-size black velvet, trimmed with aigrattes.

Mrs. Frederick English looks well in a walking suit of navy-blue serge, the skirt of which has a pointed overskirt in the back. The coat is short and rounded and has a collar of sable fur. Mrs. English wears a close-fitting black velvet hat, trimmed with breast feathers.
