Keen House, was successfully launched this week, and each day has seen a gathering of amilit people in the rooms of the Jones Wister house on Rittenhouse square. The undertaking seems to fill a long-felt want in this city, for here busy matrons may send their young daughters with the assurance that they will be carefully chaperoned by the ladies who are running the teas. And one may drop in alone at any hour, feeling quite certain of meeting a friend with whom to chat or to dance. Mrs. Harry Thayer was noticed at Keen

House the other day, wearing a smart afternoon costume of midnight blue velvet. The skirt, which was made quite full and short, revealing fawn-colored topped boots, had a gathered overskirt of black taffeta. The coat was a redingote and had a high-standing collar of skunk fur. Under this was worn tailored blouse of fawn-colored creps de chine.

A striking figure was made by Miss Margaret Megargee, who wore a trotteur of navy blue gabardine. The jacket was quite short and boxlike, and had a military collar edged with fur. Miss Megargee's hat was of black velvet, helmet-shaped, and had two spreading Mercury wings at the front. Miss Ruth Coxe, who dropped in for a dance or two, wore a suit of cinnamon-brown cloth. Her hat was trimmed with wide loops of brown ribbon and she carried brown furs.

Miss Mary Evelyn Chew appeared recently at one of the Bellevue-Stratford the dansants wearing a suit of beige-colored cloth, cut on severely simple lines. The coat was quite mannish, and was belted in at the waist in Norfolk effect. The young girl's hat was of brown with two huge quills of beige color, pointed sharply upward at either side. Spats to match the gown and civet cat furs completed the interesting costume.

And oh! Dick," he went on, "if you've time will you say O'er the 'phone to my house that with you I will stay!"

Now this was all right, but later we find The young man Aret mentioned had some change of mind; Or perhaps he forgot, at least so it's said, He went out to his home and forthwith

The rest of the family all had gone out, and the mails, all alone, heard some moving about,

ONE evening last week, a young man Now, he by this time tucked away in his Half-awake, told these knockers to go where it's hot.
But the cops had no humor, they could not take fun.
So they broke down his door and went in with a gun.

When at last the crowd, struggling, arrived on the first floor.

The maids gathered courage, came in from back door,

They saie then the "felon," all took a good "Why, that's Mr. Jack," said the very wise

Oh! the cops then were troubled because of the bicker.
But Jack squared them all with some very and they listened in fear, keping noises and Papa and Hamma coming home felt would cease;

But as they kept up they just called the To see these, the caps and Jush in his police.
