FRENCH SOLDIERS LIGHTEN TASKS WITH A LITTLE BLANKET TOSSING
This is one of the oldest sports known to military camps—initiating a recruit by forcing him to do the spread-eagle while a dozen eager hands wield the springy blanket. And the game never seems to grow stale from repetition.

GERMAN DEATH'S HEAD HUSSAR
A typical member of the crack regiment made famous by the Crown Prince's connection with it and by the white skull that decorates the fur busby.

THIS HORSE IS A BACHELOR AND A WOMAN HATER
He belongs to Traffic Policeman Charles Spicer, attached to the 65th and Woodland avenue station, and his name is Barney. He hates everything with a skirt attached to it and invariably shies whenever a lady approaches, no matter how harmless her intent.

ENGLAND CARES FOR BELGIUM'S CROP OF WAR BABIES
These youngsters are the offspring of refugees who fled from the German invasion. Some of them were born in mid-channel as thousands crowded the boats that left Antwerp and Ostend by hundreds. The fathers of several of them were killed in early battles.

NOTED AMERICAN SURGEON AT PARIS WAR HOSPITAL
At the left is Dr. Joseph Blake, whose divorce and subsequent marriage to Mrs. Clarence Mackay stirred New York society some months ago. The dog in the picture belongs to one of the wounded Algerians, whose life he saved by guiding a surgeon to him.
