Merion Branch Met This Morning at Home of Mrs. M. J. McMinamin.

The Merion Branch of the Emergency Aid met this morning at the home of Mrs. M. J. McMinamin, corner of Old Lancaster road and Highland avenue.

Since the organization of this branch, two months ago, more than $70 worth of sewing has been given out to unemployed women, and within the last week several children unable to attend the University Settlement Kindergarten, because of insufficient wearing apparel, have been supplied with new and warm clothes,

Recently one of the members of the branch gave an invalid's chair which had previously been used by her little daughter. A silver plate on the chair bears the inscription "Phyllia" chair," and in future it will become a community chair to be loaned to any woman or child in need of such a comfort in times of convalescence and who is unable to afford the luxury of one.

WOMEN

Woman's relation to the war has been the grimmest lesson of the present conflict. That the women who are most helpless in preventing it should have to bear its heaviest burdens has been an appalling realization. It is the women who drain war's bitterest lees. not only the Belgian women, whose homes have been leveled to a great waste to make a fitting setting for the war, but the waiting women of England and Germany, whose homes are not yet invaded, but who are walt-

In contrast to the helplessness of these women, it is thrilling to read of the constructive attitude taken by our American women, while there is still time, in the fermation of a Woman's Peace Party, under the presidency of Jane Addams. The Independent devotes several pages to the Woman's Peace Movement, and speaking editorially says (1):

ment, and speaking editorially says (1):

On Sunday afternoon, January 10, 3000 women crowded into the ballroom of the New Willard at Washington, D. C. They formed themselves into the "Woman's Pence Party," the first in the world. They issued a manifesto, unsurpassed, we think, in power and moral fervor by anything that has been issued here or abroad since the Great Warbegan. They adopted a platform radical, sound, statesmanlike, constructive. Though not a line about the conference appeared the next morning in five of the six leading New York newspapers, which found space to devote 63 columns to the man-killing in Europe and the alleged reasons why the United States should increase her army and mavy, we think the conference so important that we publish in full the final document issued by it, and we urge every one of our women readers to Join the party.

The Peace Party's "Declaration of Princi-

The Peace Party's "Declaration of Principles" says in part:

We women of the United States, assembled We women of the United States, assembled in behalf of world peace, grateful for the security of our own country, but sorrowing for the misery of all involved in the present struggle, do hereby band ourselves together to demand that war should be abolished. We demand that women be given a share in deciding between war and peace in all the courts of flight debate; within the home, the school, the church, the industrial order and the State. the State.

Protesting and Demanding

So protesting and so demanding, we hereby form ourselves into a national organization to be called the "Woman's Peace Party." In addition to their platform, they passed the following resolution: "That, we denounce with all the earnestness of which we are capable the concerted attempt now being made to force this country into still further preparedness for war. We desire to make a solemn appeal to the higher attributes of our common humanity to help us unmask this menace to our civilization." butes of our common humanity to help us un-mask this menace to our civilization."

Sustaining mem-bers, who shall individually pay $1 annually into the national treasury. Until the ap-pointment of a treasurer, dues and contri-butions may be sent to Juliet Barrett Rublee, 1105 16th street, Washington, D. C.

Among the most powerful and vivid articles describing the war are those written by a woman, Corra Harris. In her "Bravest of the Brave" (2), she has summed up very skilfully the position and temperament each of the various nationalities of women involved in the war. She writes:

volved in the war. She writes:

The Belgian women have been the literal victims. They have been scattered to the four winds of the earth. They have been trampled in the dust by the feet of an invading army. I have seen women who were forced to witness the execution of their husbands, women who ran screaming with terror from their burning homes into a world filled with German soldiers. I have seen not one or two, but literally thousands of them who were famished for water and starving for bread. I have seen children less than two years of age who have been withstarving for bread. I have seen children less than two years of age who have been without food for four days, young babes in their mother's arms, whose breasts had been dried by the awful terrors through which they had passed. I have seen women accustomed to every comfort staggering into a strange land, without shoes on their feet and without a centime in their pockets.

One must entertain the highest admiration for the German women. In a sense, they are

Centime in their pockets.

One must entertain the highest admiration for the German women. In a sense, they are no less the victims of the Kaiser's army than the Belgian women. They impressed me as the greatest women of Europe, the most pathetic in their bondage to men. They were by far the most thoughtful, the most capable, the most helpless. They had the mournful sense of sibyls in regard to their position. They were not hopeful, they were only patient. They had the brains of scholars and philosophers, the seer spirits of poets. They were the slaves of the order of things there. This war is the great opportunity for the women of Germany. And they have met it with courage. They are filling men's places in every walk of life. They are no longer at the bottom, but at the top.

Of all the women in the world at the present moment, what the French woman is and what she does are most important. Of all the women I have seen, she is the least self conscious. She does not think of herself at all. She is the last perfect stroke in this terrific picture—a little figure in the background, standing like a spirit in the deeper shadows, with dark eyes looking serenely out of a set white face; with red lips firmly closed, not smilling, never drooping, always looking beyond the hour of this tragedy to the France of her faith. She belongs, as immortelles belong, above the graves of the bravest; as hope transfigures despair. Such dignity and such repose have never been surpassed by the women of any nation invaded by a hostile army.

Clubbing the Clubs

An article which, thought it may not be popular, ought certainly to rouse comment. belabors "Clubwomen's Reading" (3) with the entire courage of its convictions. It is the first of a series and is called "The Malady." The other two will be "A Diagnosis" and "The Remedy." Mr. A. E. Bostwick appears to be more than a mere anti-soffragist, though just what he is he does not reveal in this article. He seems, however, to be very frank, and quite brave.

very frank, and quite brave.

Unfortunately, the horizon of our women's clubs is that of the puddle instead of the ocean. When I assert boldly that at the present time the majority of vague and illogical readers are women, and that women's clubs are responsible for much of this kind of reading, I shall doubtless incur the displeasure of the school of feminists who seem bent on minimizing the differences between the two sexes. Obvious physical differences they have not been able to explain away—that men and women should have minds of the same type is a physiological impossibility.

have minds of the same type is a physiciogical impossibility.

Why the feverish anxiety of the girls' colleges to prove that their graduates are marrying and bearing children? The fact is that the problem of the education of the sexes is not yet solved. Educating one sex alone didn't work: neither, I believe, does the present plan of educating both alike, whether in the same institution or separately.

There is a foreeful summing up of facts relating to the minimum wage question by Sonia Levisn in "Good Mussy" (4): Has a State the right to force its industries to pay its men workers a wage sufficient to lead a decent and healthy life? This ques-tion is to be decided in February by the United States Supreme Court.

What Is Respectability

In a half-frivolous, half-satirical article, "The Widow on Prohibition" (5), the widow gently chaffs at the widely varying codes of respectability.

For instance, at Houston, Texas, two ladies at 5:30 in the afternoon went into the Hotel Blank for an early dinner. The order was given, and in finishing, the bontess, a stranger in the town, said "Bring two cocktails," and told the waiter how she wanted them made. The waiter hostated and then said, "Very sorry, madam, but we are not allowed to serve a cocktail unless you have a man with you." The woman, as indignant as amused, said impulsively, "Oh, very well, order a man—any man for whose respectability the manager can vouch—a bellboy or porter—until we drink the cocktails." The poor waiter was so distressed that pity divided with indignation. But the hostess declaring for personal liberty, and that there was undoubtedly some individual interpretation of a Texas law, canceled the order for dinner. Down to the office they went, and saked to see the manager. The manager was not in. The hostess, who had traveled about a great deal, said to the clerk that she had never but once run against that rule in a hotel, and that was in Chicago, where about a great deal, said to the clerk that she had never but once run against that rule in a hotel, and that was in Chicago, where there had been a hotel and annex, designated as "Proper" and "Improper," respectively. In the "Improper" this rule obtained, and one time the manager himself came to the rescue and became the escort. Just then a friend—a man—appeared on the scene and saved the wituation. As they turned away to go to another dining place, where morals for women were not gauged by—with or without—a male escort, the would-be hostens was told that the Hotel Blank had for its manager the former manager of the "Improper." proper.
