FOR THE WOMAN AND THE HOME-PRIZES OFFERED FOR ORIGINAL SUGGESTION

How the Pretty Girl Succee ds or Fails

cial "aids" to beauty, it is really hard to natural beauty underneath the artificial.

beauty of the flower, as so many foolish happy lady, damaels fondly imagine. Upon the conteary, it only takes away its beauty and of that wholesome fact. No, indeed! Little Miss Modernity would only laugh

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever." goes the old saying. Yes, this is true, but with reservations! If the beauty is lities quite as assiduously as the girl who natural and fresh, then the old saying is has been less favored by nature. For delightfully true. But it scarcely applies many men shun the pretty girl as being to the artificial,

The girl who is genuinely pretty has bring her many small trials and vexations, too. For the people who fondly imagine that beauty in woman is the only thing that really matters are laboring under a sad delusion.

An exceedingly pretty girl was bewailing her fate only the other day: "The men I meet don't seem to care two pins whether I am clever or interesting or intelligent," said she delefully, "They only want to tell me how pretty I am! I would infinitely rather be thought amusing, or witty, or a fine conversationalist than just be classed as a sweet little doll! And I am classed as a sweet little doll, that is the tragedy of it! Yes, I am convinced that the average man likes a woman to be a fool! He doesn't want brains in a woman, not he! That would be usurping his lordly prerogative! Oh yes, I have lots of so-called admirers. At first I was pleased, and took their adulation as a compliment. But now I value it at its true worth! For it's only transient admiration for what they are pleased to call my beauty! It doesn't include admiration for anything elseneither my disposition, nor my mentality, nor my powers of conversation."

I noticed a very homely-looking girl eagerly drinking in every word the pretty girl poutingly uttered. There was an expression of intense, hungry wistfulness on the face of the homely girl. I knew that she was envying her attractive companion to the very depths of her soul. Granting that the words of the pretty girl were decidedly exaggerated, what would the homely girl not have given for that half-loaf of admiration which is better than no bread at all! For the homely girl in this particular instance had neither brains, nor beauty, nor a particularly fine disposition to recommend her.

The girl who declares that men only care for mere outward beauty in woman has surely some lack within herself. For if such has been her experience the fault must be largely her own. She can have had little to offer these men beyond the charm of her beauty.

. . .

"But men don't want anything else," she will declare. "Men want a girl to be merely a pretty little mindless fool!"

Yes, the foolish, vacuous, empty men want this-but never, never do the best, the worth-while men want anything of this sort. To attract the "worth-while" man a girl must have sterling qualities to recommend her. Beauty is not essential, although it is a valuable asset. But only an asset, remember that! It must be backed by an intelligent, interesting mind, a sweet personality and a kindly disposition.

One has only to glance through the annals of history to see that many of the plainest women imaginable have been the objects of the deepest love and most lard you have to purchase.

In these days of paint and powder, eye- | lasting passion on the part of men of brow-penciling and a multitude of artifi- the highest intellectual rank and ability. In cases where great beauty was added tell whether a girl is pretty or otherwise, to this magnetic personality, tragedy has and almost impossible to discover the often resulted. Mary, Queen of Scots, was one of the loveliest and most be-That this should be so is a real pity. witching women who ever lived, both "Painting the Hly" does not add to the mentally and physically-and a most un-

But to every picture there is a reverse its freshness. But you simply could not | side, and the pretty girl should be thankconvince the devotee of paint and powder ful for her gift of beauty. But she must overcome the very great temptation which comes to every pretty girl to rest on her laurels, so to speak, and allow her beauty to be the only attraction she has to offer. She must cultivate her good qualconceiled or brainless, or uninteresting. Why plainness of face should be taken as a size of intelligence strikes me as much to be thankful for-although it will extraordinary, but some men do actually think so!

The pretty girl is always sure of a certain amount of homage from men-But the quality of that homage depends entirely upon herself. Beauty brings admiration and adulation, and a "good time" in the way of masculine attention -but beauty, to arouse and keep deep and lasting love, should be backed by qualifies that endure and endear.

PRIZES OFFERED DAILY

For the following suggestions sent in by readers of the Evening Lemma prizes of $1 and 50 cents are awarded.

All suggestions should be addressed to Ellen Adair. Editor of Women's Pace. Evening Lerger, Independence Square, Philadelphia.

A prize of $1 has been awarded to Mrs. P. C. Jones, 5441 Walnut street, Philadel-phia, for the following suggestion: A ciothespin makes an admirable apple corer when the housewife does not possess one of the latter. Insert the clothespin at the stem end of the apple about an inch and twist it around. Then nush it clear through the other end and the core drops out. This works just as neatly as any corer one can buy.

A prize of 50 cents has been awarded to Anna B. Rogers, Jefferson Nurse Home, Philadelphia, for the following suggestion: When cooking new pod peas do not pod, but throw into bolling water and cook until tender. The pods will rise to top of water and peas will go to bottom. Strain the pods off top. Peas are better flavor and saves much labor.

A prize of 50 cents has been awarded to Mrs. E. Bohem, 536 North 65th street, for the following suggestion:

An excellent way to clean white enamel furniture is take a dessertspoon of bicarbonate of soda, a half pint of warm water and a few drops of ammonia. Saturate a sponge or white rag well with this solution and carefully go over the furniture. As the water becomes soiled renew the solution; then wine dry with a clean rag; lastly rub with a soft flannel cloth to restore the polish. Never use soap, as it makes it yellow. I have just cleaned a bedroom suite and it looks

A prize of 50 cents has been awarded to Mary Pescay, 4636 Sansom street, Philadel-phia, for the following suggestion:

To purify grease and fat drippings. such as are left in the pan after frying anything, add an amount of water equal to the amount of grease; allow to come to a boil and then cool. The undesirable parts sink to the buttom and the nice white lard which has separated comes to the top. Skim this part off and save It can be used again for anything at all that lard is used for and effects a very great saving in the amount of new

CHILDREN'S CORNER

Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary

MARY, Mary, quite contrary, was a thing that we are sure about. How little girl who lived in a certain big would you like narclasus?" sity. I won't tell you which big city, for then you might think you knew Mary, and that would make her feel badlyshe don't like people to tell things about her contrariness, you see. That is, somefimes she don't. Other times, she laughs about her funny ways as much as you or I would. But, being contrary, you never can quite tell which way you will find

Her real name was just plain Mary, but so often she was contrary that her family had named her after the Mary of Mother Goose Village.

Like the Mary in the book, this Mary had a garden. She was very proud of it and liked to pick the flowers, though I faper she didn't do any more weed pull-ing than most other little girls do-may-be not as much.

be not as much.

When the winter time came, Mary's garden died and she missed it very much. "I do wish that old Jack Frost had let me keep my garden," she said to her mother one day. "I like gardens and I think it was real unkind of him to these mine all up!"

"He couldn't help it, dear," said her souther, comfortingly, "he couldn't pick of your garden and save it, he had to rease them all. If you like gardens so til, may don't you make a winter arder?"

"Now see my nasturiums!" Gried Mary.
"Who saye they won't grow! Just see them!"
And grow they did-for a while. They soliday in the winter time and Mary a delighted with the idea.
Their's put the very thing I want to their, essistmed Mary in de"Think what fin it will be to things grow! And having them be the window. I won't have to cover on the ground to watch them I have to be window. I won't have to cover on the ground to watch them
I the topic have added Mary (quite tray). I want masuriums!"

Mary had to give up. "I guest down and them, added Mary (quite tray). I want masuriums!"

Mary had to give up. "I guest down and to give up. "I guest down and the grown assurium and the see them."

Mary had to give up. "I guest
down and to give up. "I guest down and believe that's the reason the Mary in the book had a garden!" usked Mary. winter garden?"

would you like narclassis?"
"I wouldn't like them at all," said Mary, quite decidedly. "I'm going to have nasturiums. I want to watch them

She was so decided about it, that her mother thought best to let her try it. So the nisturiums were planted in a pretty brown crock.

watered them and tended them

"Now one my nasturiums?" oried Mary. "Now see my nasturiuma!" cried Mary. Who saye they won't grow! Just see Congregate, 1925 Chara Ingrams Judicon.

JOHN ERLEIGH, SCHOOLMASTER

A GRIPPING STORY OF LOVE, MYSTERY AND KIDNAPPING, By CLAVER MORRIS Author of "John Bredon, Solicitor."

Guy Wimberley, son of Anne, the Marchioness of Wimberley, and heir to the vast Wimberley states, is in danger of death from two groups of complicators. One group is led by Dick Merlet, a cousin of Guy's, and Vertigan, science master at Harptree School, where Guy is studying. The other group is led by Abortor Anderson, also of the school. On Erieigh, head of Harptree School, is engaged to Anne Wimberley. His sister, Mrs. group is led by the investment of the first plot. The best grade to Anne Wimberley. His sister, Mrs. group is involved in the first plot. The best grade is involved in the first plot. The best grade is involved in the first plot. The best grade is involved in the first plot. The best grade is involved in the first plot. The best grade is involved in the state and les another affer for his crime. Service in the plot best grade is ineffective. After several unauccessful attempts, Guy Wimberley is kidnaped. Mrs. Travers denies all knowledge of his whereabouts. She is withdrawing from the plot, because her son James is in love with Guy's sister. Joan Wimberley. Freshering to pay a ransom. Lord Arthur walts on a desolate island, but, instead of the conspirators, he finds a dead man. Doctor Anderson. News comes that Guy Wimberley and Dick Merlet were drowned off the coast of Spain. A day later an attack is made on Lord Arthur Merlet, who is next in the succession. Erloigh, after, making sure that his past

A year passes. John Erleigh has been com-pelled by Lord Arthur to break his engage-nish to Anne Wimberley. Lord Arthur suc-ceeds to the estates. Joan is still in love with James Travers. James has composed a great opers. Vertigan blackmatts Erleigh and demands 1000 pounds.

Vertigan blackmails Erieign and demands 1000 pounds.
Lord Arthur goes to Spain to unravel the mystery of Guy's death.
He finds a clue through Roderigo Lopez, who has seen a boy disguised as a girl being taken on a train, Lord Arthur suspects a brother of Dick Meriet of being implicated. He returns to England to find Lady Anne married.

CHAPTER XXXI. When he had finished writing he packed his leather trunk, paid his bill, and took his departure. An hour later he was in the train from Paris, and he intended to go on from Paris to England. "I must find out all about this William Meriet," he thought. "Lord Wimberley has promised to say nothing of him to any of the English detectives."

He leant back in the corner of his carriage and had pleasant visions of £10,000. It was a large sum-in Spain almost a big fortune. There would be plenty left for a little honest enjoyment when the castle had been restored and new dresses purchased for his five sisters. He liked to think of the new dresses. It was possible that they might help the wearers of them to find husbands.

Autumn passed into winter so quickly that year in England that one week it was warm and sunny enough for John Erleigh to row his wife up the river and have tea out of doors, and the next week saw snow on the ground and a hard frost that promised skating. On the day term ended, however, it was damp and chilly, and the fog lay over the land like a yellow pall. John Erleigh, sitting at the table in his study, could hardly see the towering mass of the ab-bey through the curtain of mist. A leafless tree, close to the window, stretched out long black arms and fingers that dripped with moisture. The fire in the grate was dull and lifeless, and a haze of smoke hung across the

It was very quiet. The school buildings quadrangie were like a body from in life has departed. The last of the which life has departed. The last of the boys had gone, waving his cap gleefully out of the window of an ancient cab. There seemed to be no sound anywhere in the schoolhouse, though the servants must have been about as usual. Even the clock had stopped. For some reason or other John Erieigh had forgotten to wind it up on its appointed day. wind it up on its appointed day. Such a faing had never happened before since he had been at the school. But his mind was so engressed with other matters that he did not notice it until he turned in his

he did not notice it until he turned in his chair to see the time.

"I'm going to pieces," he muttered, rising to his feet and taking out the key from a china vaze. He wound up the clock and set it by his watch. Then he seated himself in his chair again. His face was pale and heagard. That stopping of the clock seemed to be an evil omen. It was as though something had sone wrong with the workings of his brain, as though he himself had run down and was no more use in the world.

It was I o'clock, and during the next half hour he turned and looked more than half a down times at the timepiace that he had roused to life again. In his eyes was the look of a man who is walt- | threat. He walked slowly toward the ing—and waiting for something to hap-pen that will mean the end of all his happiness. That was,in fact, exactly how matters stood. the mantelpiece. "The fog has nearly put the fire out,"

His wife and Joan had been in London since the previous night—had gone there on such prosaic business as seeing the dentist. Vertigan had left Harptree that morning and had announced his intention of seeing Lady Wimberley before she returned to Harptree Vertigan had dealnot turned to Harptree. Vertigan had drained John Erleigh dry. The headmaster, foreing matters to a crisis, had refused to borrow any more money from his wife, was easier and simpler to go to the source of the stream.

John Erleigh had let him go. Weeks London."
before he had come to this decision—that "Then if Vertigan asked for any more money he would not give it to the man. His decision had been arrived at suddenly as he had caught a curious expression of pain and fear in his wife's eyes when he had asked her for the last thousand pounds. It was better for her to know the truth than to ok at him like that—out of the anguish of her soul. Besides, he felt that he was breaking to pieces under the strain. He ought to have told the woman he loved before he married her. It was late now-but perhaps not too late. She might have pity on him; she might be able to under stand. On the other hand, the confession -it amounted to that though it did not come from his own lips-might mean the end of all happiness.

And now he was waiting with fear in his eyes for his wife to return. The train was due at Harptree at a quarter to four. Anne had announced her intention of returning by that train.

returning by that train.

The clock struck the half-hour—half-past three—and after that the minutes dragged even more wearily. John Erleigh could not concentrate his mind on anything. For more than an hour a half-written letter had lain before him—a letter of no importance, such as any one could write without effort. But John Erleigh could not finish it. When he was not looking at the clock his eyes were fixed on the window, where the yellow light was changing to a dull gray. The had on the window, where the yellow light was changing to a dull gray. The abbey disappeared altogether and then the giant arms and fingers of the tree. And then it grew so dark that he could not see the face of the clock. The ticking of it seemed very loud ond very slow.

Then the great abbey clock chimed out a o'clock and the whole room seemed to vibrate. After that there was slience for a few minutes, and then the purr of a motor and the crunching of wheels on the gravel drive. John Erieigh shuddered and blinked his eyes like a man awakening from sleep. He heard the distinct tinkle of a bell, and then the opening and closing of the hall doors, and the sound of footsteps and voices in the hall.

John Erieigh rose to his feet, walked to the door and then returned to his seat at the table. It was impossible to go out into the hall and greet his wife just as if nothing had happened. He would walt until she came to him. She should find him there, hiding his shame in the darkness. Then the great abbey clock chimed out

The sound of voices died away, and again there was silence. Perhaps Vertigan had not struck the blow after all. Or perhaps the servants had told his wife that he was out. He had not rung the bell for tea; he had gone out at 2 o'clock and no one had seen him return. At any rate there would be a respite for a few hours, perhaps for a few days. He breathed more freely.

Five minutes passed and then he heard his wife ask a servant where he was. A few moments later the door opened and she entered the room.

"Ara you here, Jack!" she queried, as she peered into the darkness.

"Yss, dear," he answered, rising to his fest. "I am here."

She did not ask him why he had not come out into the hall to greet her, or why he was sitting in the dark. She closed the door and made her way across the room to the rock way across The sound of voices died away, and closed the door and made her way across the room to the red glow of the fire. Stooping, she broke up some of the coal with the poker, and there was the ficker of a few feeble flames. The light showed her face, but not very clarity.

"I'm afraid you've had a wretched journey," said Erieigh, nervously. His wifa did not reply, and then he knew, for cartain, that Vertigan had carried out his fireplace. His wife was standing motion-less, looking down at the flickering flames. One of her hands was resting on he said. She looked at him with dull, weary eyes, opened her lips as if to speak and then stared down at the fire again. "It is no use my pretending that I don't know," he said abruptly and almost fiercely, "Vertigan has told you. He threatened to tell you if I did not come to you for more money. That could not go on-I have been a coward long enough -I wished him to tell you-I would have told you myself if you had not been in

"Then it is true?" she said me hanlcally. "I do not know what he told you, but I expect it was the truth. need for him to lie. The truth was evil enough—Anne, I-if I had thought that this was likely to happen I would have told you before I asked you to marry me. But I lived in a fool's paradise. Ver-tigan had never asked me for money until that day-when he came down into Devonshire. It did not occur to me that he would ever ask for it-I must have been mad."

For nearly a minute there was silence. Then she looked at him again.
"What is to happen now?" she said

"I do not know, Anne. I will not ask you to pay the money. Perhaps, on the whole, it would be better to make a firm stand-now-once and for all-let the man "I was not thinking of the money," she continued in the same dult, even voice. "The money shall be paid—all my money if it is necessary. I was thinking of our-

"You-you mean," he stammered.
"Anne-you must not decide anything until I have told you the story. Perhaps it will sound different when I tell it to you. Anne, dear, for pity sake, do not decide anything yet—sit down and listen to what I have to say—I will not plead with you do anything to warp your judgment. You shall hear the plain facts."

She seated herself in a chair by the wretched fire and shivered as if she were cold. Erleigh remained standing. It was easier for him to talk thus than if they ensier for him to take had sat face to face.

(Continued Monday)
(Copyright, 1914, by the Associated Newspapers, Limited.

Across the Counter

The little boutonnieres of fruits are still in vogue, and many charming combinations are to be seen, such as dark berries, with a gilded one in the centre, and various other styles, selling at 25, 40,

You can buy a French hand-embroi-dered handkerchief for $38, or you can select some dainty, sheer ones for the comparatively moderate price of 50 cents up, apiece.
A fitted work bag is a convenience saves looking all over for your scissors and things. They vary in price accord-ing to style, and begin at 25 cents to 38. A fitted traveling bag can be bought for $45, this includes ivory articles and a pin ceals the ugly door-stopper by using the art nouveau ones, statues of heavy bronze. They are $3 up.

A mahogany candlestick will add a quaint touch to your Dutch hall or mantelpiece, and they only cost from $6 cents

Woman's Way Has every Better Than woman a good figure in Philadelphia that wears a good corset? Not three in ten. No fault of the corsets; fault of the fitting. When you buy your next corset let experienced fitters show you what can be done for your figure—it costs no more. Better Than Man's Way costs no more,

Some Pretty Styles in Hats

my mind.

this forcing of the seasons is absurd! that were set forth there were exquise.

Here we are with the iclest of loy winds My friend Jane, who, as I have said in blowing, and everything as cold and as wintry as possible, yet if you aren't ed a sailor-shaped hat that exactly suite wearing a straw hat you are "out of Yes, it is absurd. Why, the beginning of last September, when the weather myself.) was so hot and one longed for coolness, all the straw hats suddenly vanished, and women everywhere appeared with heavy millinery of black velvet or some- is wonderful. I really couldn't make a thing similar. Well do I remember setting forth on a and I don't know when I felt more heated. Now here come all the spring hats, and we simply must have one, unless we wish to be entirely demodes-and that would never do, would it?

I must confess that I started out with two friends of mine this morning in a far from cheerful frame of mind. For I didn't want to buy a straw hat, yet as they were going to make millinery Jane. purchases I didn't want to be left out of the fun.

place to which my two friends pin their before the purchase was made, and to faith, a sudden change came o'er the little hat in my proud possession.

As far as millinery goes, I think that spirit of my dream. For really the his knowing what suits you, by the way, wish I was sure I had that special I wandered round the place, trying a every sort of shape and style. Then riety in coloring of the new spring motor fore, is a large and buxom damsel, see her style, (There's a genuine an a

There was one rather large hat he barnyard straw that took my wanders broiling hot morning under one of these close-fitting velvet "chapeaux." I had fancy. But Jane persuaded me against a a tremendous amount of shopping to do "You want something more dressedlooking than that, Dorothy," said the So I gave in. Jane always is right a the buying of hats, somehow.

> you," she cried later. In her hand was a lovely little hat w milan straw, entirely covered with pay pink rosebuds.

"Here is something that ought to sa

"It will be the very thing for the new gray suit of yours, Dorothy," a hat, I was delighted with it. For a However, when we reached the millinery suited me to perfection. It wasn't ber

Kid's Chronicle

TROTE a pome about babys today, beeling this:

BABYS A baby is a bald heded persin Wich speeks in forrin sounds,

It orawls erround like sum kind of a bug

No man was evvir a littel gerl And no lady was evvir a boy, But both of them wen they began, Was wunts a baby, O joy.

And nevvir leeps or bounds.

They sleep awl day and cry awl nite And raw milk is awl they eet, And wenevvir they wunt amusemint They start to play with there feat.

And its fearse to have 5 or 6, Bekause they wawk like dawgs awn thare hands and feat But you cant teetch them how to do

Its quite a trubbil to have a baby erround

Its awl rite to like yure naybors dawg, Or even there cat, maybe, But noboddy is espeshilly fond Of enyboddy eltses baby.

O a Chinermans baby is yello And a savidges baby is black, But no mattir wat langwidge you tawk to them in,

Baby tawk is awl they tawk back. Its grate to see a baby laff,
And its fearse to see wun cry,

But weathir they cry or weathir they laff, Thares nevvir eny reason why. O awlways be kind to babys Bekause no mattir how funny they look, Thats how you ust to be.

Hints for the Spring Toilette The early spring styles are making their appearance and the straw hat is not at all unusual on the street. Here are a few advance notes on the edicts of fashion:

Most of the new shoes have straps over the instep. These are cool and comfortable for warm days, and rich beadings and embroidery on the straps add a touch of splendor. All kinds kinds of boleros are coming in again. The old-fashioned and highly artistic ostrich feather fan has made its appear-Dance frocks are made of sheerest organdie.

The early straw hats are made with a trimming of satin and resemble military turbans. Buckles will be worn on all slippers even those for street wear, and the high boot, made of brown or bronze leather, will remain in favor. Make your wide skirt short—a narrow one is out of the question. White petiticoats have deep, full ruffles of soft lace.

of soft lace. The newest gloves are trimmed with all kinds of gaudy stitchings. If you can wear brown, do so by all means; this promises to be a brown season.

The Gift

From friend to friend, the choicest gift
That ever love can give,
Is that which comes the heart to lift,
Or helps the soul to live.
Of all fair bounties ever sought,
Of gems or jewels rare,
What treasure like a lovely thought,
Or love's far-reaching prayer.

Or love's far-reaching prayer.

MARY MAPES DODGE.

And when I had tried on the her

The Value of Fresh Air

Senior Surgeon Banks, of the United States Public Health Service, advisevery one to breathe in all the free air that is possible. That is what fre air is for, says he. The ancient spestition about the harmful effects of the night air is quite exploded by his topgestion. Night air, aside from the bethat the sun is absent, is no different from the air in the daytime. The atmospheric envelope of the earth does me change from benign to malign in the twinkling of an eye after sundown R is still composed of nitrogen, exygen, egon and carbon dioxide in the norma proportions.

The open-air treatment for tubers losis had first to combat with this hour superstition when it was starting, and the remarkable results it achieved was u only justification. This generation is to only justification. This generation is an nessing the true realization of the value of fresh air, whether in small drawing or in bulk. A constantly increasing member of persons are sleeping in the operation of the control of the co and re-respiring second-hand and is small, closed bedroom. You could a better safeguard your health or che the doctor than by breathing in all the fresh air you can, both night and day

The Coming of Spring

When comes spring? When blithest the robins sing. And the violet has her hour? Not till the heart's in flower

JOHN VANCE CHENEY

-no pipes, valves, pressure tanks, mantles; no fierce white light-suitable for street lighting. No danger, smoke, odor or expensive upkeep cost. No trouble-no worry-when

using angle lamps

but 16 hours of unshadowed light from one quart of oil safety, comfort, simplicity, convenience, labor-saving. Splendid Fire-Insurance, Out of the way; no danger of upset-ting. Write us for catalog No 34.

THE ANGLE MFG. CO. 244-246 West 23rd St., New York City

See Picturesque California Expositions without cost

Take advantage of the biggest offer ever made by any newspaper in America-fifty free trips to the Panama-Pacific and San Diego Expositions with every item of expense paid by the Public Ledger-Evening Ledger. You can win the trip in your spare time

Contestant's Entry Blank

Public Ledger Evening Ledger Independence Square, Philadelphia Pienas enter my name as a contestant for the Panama-Pacific Exposition Tour.

Send me all the necessary information and subscription bianks.