FTUESDAY night brought about a curious change at the Metropolitan Opera House, in regard to its attendance, for although the orchestra and gallery were crowded to overflowing with music-lovers, many of the boxes stood empty, mute evidence of the passing of the season. But while the boxes here and there looked desolate others were filled with those who were unable to resist the attraction of Madame Sans Gene.

Mrs. Alexander Van Rennselaer is in the South, but her recently arrived brother. Anthony J. Drexel, entertained in her box, and held quite a reception after his long absence abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. Tower entertained a number of young persons, including their daughters, Miss Helen Tower and Miss Gertrude Tower, the latter of whom was handsomely gowned in apricot satin with graceful draperies of tulle cascading from the shoulders. The frock had a wide panel of satin at the back. Her sister, Miss Helen Tower, wore a graceful little gown of pale pink satin with an overdress of crystals. Miss Lois Cassatt looked charmingly quaint in a frock of pompadour taffeta with a wide girdle of peacock clue. The voluminous skirt was quite short and had quillings around the bottom. The upper half of the bodice was of tulle in a stade harmonizing with the girdle. Mrs. Harry Waln Harrison, in a box with Mrs. Charles Custis Harrison, Jr., was radiant in white satin and crystals. Her flat coiffure was bound by a jeweled fillet. Mrs. Charlie Harrison's gown of lustrous black satin afforded a striking contrast. Mrs. Cornelius Stevenson entertained in the Stotesbury box. Miss E. Gwen Martin, who entertained in her father's box, wore an exquisite gown of orchidcolored pussy willow taffets, with a flounced skirt and trimmings of chiffon and cream lace. A girlish frock of white satin with a wide girdle of royal blue velvet and crystal trimming on the bodice was worn by Miss Kitty

Mrs. Albert L. Smith appeared in a charming gown of Venetian red brocaded velvet, a shade which proved most becoming to her type. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jeffords had several guests in their box, Mrs. Jeffords looking well in pale pink satin veiled in not embroidered in pearls.
