lan became involved, body and roul, in the Burr conspiracy. When the crashtame, Jefferson and the House of Virginin undertook to break the conspirators in a great treason trial at Richmond, and many of the losser fry got caught, among them Nolan.

"When the president of the court asked him at the close of the trial if he wished to say anything to show he had always hean faithful to the Government, he cried out in a fit of frenzy, Damn the United States, I hope I may never hear of the United States.' Old Colonel Morgan, who was presiding, was shocked. The officers who sat in that court were men who had served through the revolution, and their lives, not to say their necks, had been risked for the very idea which Nolan so cavallerly cursed.

"If Nolan had compared Washington to Arnold or cried God save King (zeorge," Morgan could not have felt worse. He called the court into his private room, and when they came out their faces were like the Aretic snow. their faces were like the Arctic snow, Colonel Morgan said: 'Prisoner, hear the sentence of the court. The court de-cides, subject to the approval of the President, that you never again hear the name of the United States." "Nolan laughed, but nobody else. Colonel Morgan was solemn and the whole room was hushed as dead as night. No-land lost his swagger in a moment. Colonel Morgan added, 'Take the pris-Mr. Marshal, to Orleans on an ed boat, deliver him to the naval tions the name of the United States to prisoner.' From that day, September 1807, until he died, May 11, 1863, he not hear the name of the United

The sentence was carried out on the following plan: Nolan was placed on a Government vessel bound on a long cruise. He was ordered treated with at courtesy. It was ordered that he provided with quarters, rations and clothing proper for an officer of his rank; that he should be exposed to no indig-nity, nor unnecessarily reminded that he was a prisoner. Under no circum-stances should he hear the name of his country nor receive information. It was the intention of the Government that he never see the country he had disowned,

"He was granted the privilege of wear-ing the regulation army uniform, but the buttons were taken off because they bore the insignia of the country he had dis-owned. He became known as 'plain but-tons.' When present in any company of men on shipboard the men were prohibited to talk of him, prospects of re-turn, politics, peace, war, letters or any-thing that would remind him of home. He was not permitted to talk with men unless an officer was present. He was scarcely ever permitted to go sahore, even in lands no way connected with the United States. He was never given an American newspaper. Even from the foreign papers given him the advertisements or stray paragraphs that alluded to the United States were cut out.

"He'd be reading something harmless when he'd come to cut-out space. Right in the midst of one of Napoleon's battles he would find a hole because on the back of the page would be an advertisement of a ship from New York or a scrap from the President's message. He literally became a man without a country. He lived his life torn from his country like a child from its mother's arms.

When he was an old man a friend was admitted to his stateroom. He found that in the privacy of his room had made a little shrine, with the

"Note these facts about Philip Nelan. the centre of this story. First, Philip Notan was born a citizen of the United States. Second, he swore away his citirenship. Third, he became a man with-out a country. Some day in the light of these three facts I should like to write a companion story to the 'Man Without a Country,' and if I did I would call it "The Man Without a Soul,' and I would The Man Without a Soul, and I would build the story around these three facts:

"First-Man is born a cliizen of two worlds. The world of the temporal and the world of the temporal and the world of the eternal—the world of the material and the world of the spiritual. Since man possesses double cliizenship, first in this world, second, in the world to come, his every act polls a double suffrage. Every man faces the problem of properly rating his double cliizenship. The average man looks after his cliizenship. The average man looks after his cliizenship in the material world fairly well as made at Mrs. Ketchum's home by ship in the material world fatrly well, as pies made at Mrs. Ketchum's home by it applies to the temporal, material, per- the girls.

"A man should look well after his citizenship in the world of the material. This is a good world. It is the best-I say is reverently-that even God could make. It is not to be despised and hurried through, and the man who never gets beyond his cook, his tallor, barber, club or limousine is nothing but a refined animal. There is the greater world of the spiritual, just as real as the world of the material. The man who ignores his citizenship in the world of the spiritual and spends all his time and energy and his citizenship in the world of the ma-terial is the consummate idiot and fool

"Second: A man may swear away his citizenship in the world of the spiritual— by one dramatic act as Nolan did, by his love of money, by his love of lust, by unbelief, by allowing his spiritual nature to lie unused for so long that all the best in him is paralyzed, so that he has no thoughts of God, no prayer, no attendance upon religious duties, by not placing him-self in an atmosphere to awaken the soul to all intents and purposes. Of course, he has a soul, I mean he has canceled his interests of citizenship in the world of the spiritual and the eternal. When a man cancels his allegations. spiritual. nal. When a man cancels his citizenship in the world of the spiritual he lapses very near to the animal. The fact is, a man's soul is about the only thing that distinguishes him from the brute crea-

"Man is five-sided; physical mental, emotional, esthetic and spiritual. The fact is you can find hints and glimmers of four of these in animals. It is the fifth which gives man his distinction.
"First: Physical. From the standpoint of physical, animal creation in particular excels man. The eagle can see farther, the deer can run faster, the rabbit and moose can hear better, the lion and the horse are more powerful. Man, of course, has a greater variety, better organization and better control of physical powers than any single animal, but in many points he is excelled by them.

"Second: Mental. We are coming to see that what we call instinct is an elementary and inferior form of thinking. Only a glimmer, of course, as com-pared to the full sunburst of man's in-telligence, nevertheless a low form of telligence, nevertheless a low form of thought, so the animal world has certain mental powers.

"Third: Emotional, No one who has heard the cow bellow for her calf, no one who has seen animals defend their young can doubt the existence of the emotional. No one who has seen the grief of the mother bird for her young can doubt the existence of the emotional in the breast of lower creation, and the emotion of some birds and animals should put us to shame by their constancy. Some animals mate for life—it is said when the dove's mate dies it will never take a that there is a love of beauty in birds and animals. But since I have seen the conscious elation of the mocking bird no one can tell me he did not know he was pouring liquid beauty from his throat. When the peacock struts across the barnyard spreading his tail into three feet of splendor, no one can tell me he didn't know it was spangled over with beauty, "Fifth, Spiritual. If man was no more overshadowed.

"Poor old Nolan turned a sad smile and said: 'Here you see I have a country.' He pointed to the foot of the bed, where was a map of the United bed, where was a map of the United man and animal stops. No animal has man and animal stops. sonable; but here the similarity between man and animal stops. No animal has over been found upon its knees in prayer. No animal has ever done anything that would even hint that it knew from whence it had come or whither it was going.

out into the Pacific. He had defined mothing in the shape of States.

"Turning to his friend Danforth he prayed? Have you never given serious farm machinery and appliances."

Concern to things spiritual? Have you said: 'Danforth, I am dying. I cannot go home. Tell me something.' Danforth weakened and told him everything. RETAIL MARKET IS EASIER THIS WEEK

Retail Prices Not Much Affected-Luxuries Remain About the Same.

The general tone of the retail market is easier this week than it has been in a long time. Although the wholesale price of lamb continued to go up and beef made a rapid jump early in the week, retail prices have not been affected. Pork prices, on the other hand, are somewhat lower. Eggs and fowl, too, have come down, while fish and vegetables remain about the same. Salmon dropped nearly 10 cents a pound during the week, because of the exsellent weather conditions in the salmon territory. Shad and smelts are still high.

In the line of luxuries, strawberries vent up to 40 cents a box again. Oranges have dropped considerably. Salads are not much changed in price than they have been recently. Following are the prices of the more

Dr. John L. Bromley, resident physician at the Episcopal and St. Timothy Hossoul? Have you never let your thoughts play around the problem of the future? Have you never considered the problem of your eternal destiny? Have you never accepted Christ as your Saylour?
