THE THEATRE

Gilbert & Sullivan

-1870 and 1915 A potpouri of 1870 and 1915 was the essence of the double bill which De Wolf Hopper and the Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company gave at the Metropolitan resterday afternoon and evening. Two of the earliest of their pieces-in fact the earliest, if memory doesn't slip-picturebook "Pinafore" and that earlier version "The Legend of Leonora," "Trial by y," which is so fearsomely entitled "a matic cantats, supplied the basis of dramatic cantata, supplied the basis of uperation.

The mixture of times and styles was in dains "Trial by Jury" as "Period: The father and costuming the young ladies of "Pinafore" with up-to-date lace frocks that were very, very different from the saments suggested by the title. Pushing "Trial by Jury" into our own day is pardonable and plausible, however much more charming it might have been in its modish eccentricities of the 70's. But a "Pinafore" with square-sail rigging and buttercup's pantalets brooding—if said buttercup's pantalets brooding—if that word will do—over modern laces and modern "shapes"—! The whole thing dreased in the ways of woodentained dreased in the ways of woodentained do "Pinafore."

Perhaps "Trial by Jury" is only a curlesity, if never sees the footlights now-sdays except in amateur productions. But it is very good fun, quite a polished specimen of song and satire for so early work. It ought, of course, to be performed intimately instead of fung across the vasty spaces of the Metropolitan, mut there is a good deal of amusement formed intimately instead of flung across formed intimately instead of flung across the vasty spaces of the Metropolitan. But there is a good deal of amusement left in the few words you can catch distinctly. It is fun to see the Jury flung themselves over the edge of the jury box as the bridesmaids enter and toas their rose wreaths to them, and, if you can, to hear them carrol, "Cheer up, we love you," to the weeping plaintiff, come in her wedding dress to press her breach of promise. The defendant is undeniably amusing and up-to-date as he tries to solve the problem with

"Til marry this lady today And marry the other tomorrow."

As for Mr. Hopper, with his egg of a head and his doppy gray wig, he is as amusing as ever; but he comes very near lesing out to the red-nosed Usher of Arthur Cunningham; until he thinks of the expedient of marrying the plaintiff lend disablying court.

mself and dissolving court. Two Bills From Mr. Mantell

Testerday afternoon and evening Rob-ert Mantell unrolled two more in the long gallery of parts that a single week brings mallery of parts that a single week strings to the Lyric. In the afternoon there was "Romeo"; in the evening, "Hamlet." If the latter came off the better it was not because of an artistic fault in Mr. Mantell. It is only the very exceptional actor that can alter a matter of years. Rômeo must be young whatever else, and R is the failing of both Mr. Mantell and Mr. Sothern that they can't achieve the impossible. But Mr. Mantell, at least, deen't turn the hot young lover new version of the melancholy As for his Hamlet, there is hardly another part in Mr. Mantell's long reper-tory where his rich voice comes into finer

We come now to the closing portion of the Czarina Waltz, and for the first time the partners are required to assume the "closed" position. From the attitudes assumed in the closing part of the preceding figure, where the dancers in a forward and back movement finish face to face and standing close together with arms upraised, it is now necessary to come into a regulation position for the execution of the formal waltz.

The lady has been momentarily poised, with her left foot some nine inches in advance of her right, both upheld hands being held by her cavaller. On the count of "one" in the measure of music that introduces the final figure now under consideration the lady steps back about two or three inches with the right foot and drops her arms. On counts "two" and "three" she permits her cavaller to extend her left arm with his right in the regulation manner, and then she curis her right forearm over the left arm of her escort.

Mary Ryan, who plays the lead of the light-fingered maid in "Stop Thief," is never tired of advising young girls who are stage struck to consider the matter long and carefully before seeking a theatrical engagement. Regarding the moral influence of the stage upon those who depend upon it for a living, Miss Ryan

"It is true that temptations and bad influences may surround a girl who earns a living, and in this work-a-day world she is to be found in every field; but it cannot be denied that in the theatrical profession there is a necessitated intimacy and a narrow and confined acquaintanceship that are not only frequently unpleasant, but in the case of the young and unsophisticated girl may easily become dangerous.

'In my estimation the moral danger of the stage does not arrive so much from its gayety as from its ioneliness. On the long jaunts that have to be taken from one city to another, the Latural disposi-tion is to make friendships, often for the consolation and advice that can be had only from those whom we call our friends. But it takes a strong mind sometimes to know just where to place the bar—to see that the line of safety is closely drawn and carefully maintained. If girls are not led into mistaken friendships and are not influenced by bad ad-visers their course is clear. But the situation is serious and should not be courted without careful consideration."

A Play Right From Life

Besides being one of these once-in-a-lifetime instances where a play, com-plete and dramatic, can be lifted directly from real life-for the drama is produced without an lota of change-the story of how the forthcoming Edison "Judge Not" came into being as a play is as interesting as the drama itself. Director Charles as the drama itself. Director Charles Brabin best tells it in his own words:

"I doubt if I ever saw an actor who had such control of his emotional powers as Charles Ogle who could stop in the very height of a strong scene and in the most perhaps, 'Am I n the right place.' He didn't seem to feel at all, though he could thrill you. I said one day, 'Good Lord, Charlie, did you ever cry in your life?' 'Yes, once,' which lends artistic variety to this dance.
I have originated. For that reason I advocate the execution of the pause in this matter: Beginning on the first measure following the four just mentioned (in which the dancers have been proceeding with the regulation walta) the lady turns to her right, and as she advances her right foot a few inches she bends forward. was all he said, and then he told me the story that so affected him. It was the simple, powerful story of a sweet, simple village girl who was lured away. When I had finished Mr. Oppenheim asked me whether he could write it. The editor of the Metro-politan Magazine bought the story on the spot. Strange to say it so affected both Charlie and myself that we never thought

Blanche Sweet in "The Captive" Samuel Goldfish announces that the title of the next release in which Blanche Sweet will be starred under the management of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company is "The Captive." This production will be a picturization of the play of the same name, by Cecil B. de Mille and Jennie MacPherson, which deals with incidents of the war between Turkey and the Balkan States. As in the case of "The Warrens, of Virginia," House Pe-ters will be the leading man. He assumes the character of a Turkish noble who is captured and assigned as prisoner, to the charge of a young Montenegrin woman for the purpose of doing the work formerly done by her brother, now slain in battle. The pessant girl, played by Miss Sweet, at first forces her captive to do all the most disagreeable and menial tasks, but presently these two contrasting char-acters become involved in one of the most unique romances ever staged.
