PRIMITIVE PEOPLES

The Seven Arts Clubs Gave a Remarkably Fine Performance Last Night.

"The Masque of the Primitive Peoples," to which all those interested in things pertaining to the arts have looked forward for many moons, was given last night in the ballroom of Horticultural Hall, and so great a success was the affair that it will probably be repeated in the near future for the benefit of those who were unable to secure seats last night. So thoroughly consistent and artistic in every respect were the numerous episodes, consisting of the Indian, the Eyzantine, "The Doom of Jemshid," Egyptian, Mitla, an Aztec Cinema. "A Chinese Wedding" and "The Fall of Troy." that one can hardly single out any particular incident as the most interesting, although "The Awakening of the Great Silence," portraying In pantomine an episede of Egypt, was probably the most thoroughly artistic. While Miss Georgiana Brown, as the queen, executed a graceful and unique dance. Bue after line of figures, tomb decorations appeared, standing out in bold relief against the white background of the tomb.

An episode in the life of Justinian, Emperor of Constantinople, admirably portrayed by Edward Warwick, was most spectacular. Miss Genevieve Clibbs, as Theodora, the dancer, aftgraceful performance.

"The Doom of Jemshid," adapted by Mrs. W. Yorke Stevenson from the Shah Nameh, the great heroic poem written in the 11th century by Firdausi, was portrayed in two exquisite scenes. The cast was made up of members of the Playe and Players.
