Sally heard no more. The scene van-ished from her vision as if the moonlight had been extinguished. It was some mo-ments before she realized that she was running madly, as if hoping flight might help her exercise that ironic vision. But when she did realize what she was doing, she but ran the faster, let people think what they would; she no longer cared; their esteem no more mattered, for she was finished with them, one and for she was finished with them, the and all—yes, even with Mrs. Gosnold.

Blindly instinct led her back to her room, again via that side door.

She flung tempestuously into its friend-ly darkness, locked herself in and dropped, spent and racked, upon the edge of the bed, clenching her hands into two hard, tight flats, gritting her teeth and fighting with all her strength to keep back the storm that threatened of sobs and tears and nervous laughter.

It wasn't as if she had really cared for the man-it was worse. It was the sum of all the blows her poor, struggling pride had suffered in the course of the last 24 hours, beginning with her awakening to the worthlessness of Lyttleton and the realization of the low esteem in which he held her, and culminating in this facer from one whose love she had refused but one the less prized for the comfort it

Nor was this all. In addition to the writhings of an exacerbated vanity, she was conscious of a sense of personal loss, as if a landmark had been razed in the perspective of her life. was, it seemed to be, intolerable! The waves of burning emotion that awept and scorched her were alternately of rage and chagrin. of rage and chagrin.

Granted the opportunity, she could easily conceive herself as dealing very vigorously with the man-trap.

Some one rattled the knob of her door. Startled, Sally jumped up, and with her wadded handkerchief dabbed hastily and superfluously at her eyes, which were supernuously at her eyes, which were quite dry as yet.

She did not answer, but eyed appre-bensively the Cark recess in which the door was set at the end of the unlighted Still she hesitated to reply. Uncertainly she moved toward the nearest wall scones and lifted her hand to the switch. She was sadly confused and unstrung, her was saily confused and nerves ajangle. The last thing she wished just then was to meet and talk to anybody.

Still it might be Mrs. Gosnold or her messenger. And that lady was Sally's one remaining friend on earth. She swallowed here it could be self fremly in hand omino ever fluffy skirts and slim, pink legs assorting oddly with the agitation betrayed by her unamiling eyes, her pal-lor, which relieved the rouge on her cheeks, like rose petals against snow.

"Thank God!" she whispered, "I've found you at last, I've looked everywhere for the last half-hour. This is the second time I've been here. You just got in, of course. Where have you been?" "Does it matter !" Sally fenced, maintaining a stony countenance. "I mean, I don't think it does, now you've run me to earth at last. What's the trouble?" 'You haven't seen Walter? He haan't told you?"

"No; I tried to speak to him half an hour ago, but he ran from me as if I were a ghost!"
"You know why!" The woman's voice rembled with restrained rage. "You impossible girl! Why, why did you let Aunt Abby go to meet him instead of you? It was fatal; it was criminal. Of course, he was fatal; it was criminal. Of course, he gave the whole show away to her, never guessing. Now it's all up with us; we'll never be asked here again, and the chances are she'll cut us out of her will into the bargain. Why did you do it? Oh, I could shake you!"

"I know well you would if you could," Sally admitted calmiy. "Only—better not try."

"Well if you must know, Mrs. Gosnoid overheard you three plotting together out there just before I came on the mosno, She was at the window overhead, listening through the shutters. I don't know what you were talking about—she didn't tell me—but it was enough to make her insist on my giving her my costume so that she might go and hear the rest of CHAPTER XV—(Continued).

"Oh!" she cried, laushing and confused, "is it you, Mrs. Warrenden? No, please don't run. It's too late now—isn't it?—when you've caught us in the act! You and Mr. Warrenden will be the first You and Mr. Warrenden will be the first to know of our happiness—"

"You haven't seen her since—"

"You haven't seen her since—"

"You haven't seen her since—"
"No," Sally answered bluntly. "Have you?"

"No. Walter and I have both been looking for her as well as you. That's why he ran when he knew about this terrible mistake; he wanted to find her and set things straight if he could. But she'-the woman stumbled and her eyes shifted again-"she's gone and hidden herself-plotting our humiliation and pun-ishment I dare say. I only wish I knew Walter is still hunting everywhere for her. See here, I presume you understand you've g.t to go now?"

Why? "For one good reason-if what has happened isn't enough to persuade you—be-cause there will be a man here from New York by the first boat-7 o'clock tomorrow morning-with a warrant for the arrest of Sarah Manvers." Are you telling the truth, Mrs. Standin?"

How dare you! No, I won't let you make me lose my temper with your in-solence. The matter is too serious, and I've no wish to see you suffer, even if you have ruined everything for us. You you have ruined everything for us. You must listen to me, Miss Manvers; be advised and go. don't know what put them on your tran, what made them suspect you were here, but the burgiar insurance people had the warrant sworn out yesterday afternoon and started aman up by the evening boat. Walter got a telegram to that effect about 10 o'clock. That's what he wanted to say to you that, and to give you some money

"But why should I leave?"
"But why should I leave?"
"Do you want to go to jail?"
"Not much. But I don't see why I need. You can easily explain that the things I left in the bathroom were left the many friends of Mr. Johnson.

all in a conspiracy to defraud the company."
"Oh!" Sally exclaimed abruptly, with an accent of enlightenment that discoun-tenanced the older woman.

With an effort, recovering, she sought to distract the girl. "Surely you must see now you have got to go! There's a boat to the main-land at 6:30. If you catch that, you'll have three hours' start, for the detective won't be able to get of, the island before haif-past nine. And you ought to be able to lose yourself in that time somehow. Hurry; I'll help you pack a satchel. You'd better wear that b' e serge; everybody wears blue serge; so it's inconspicuous. And here's some money for traveling ex-

Sally ignored the little fold of bills held out to her.

"I'm not going." she declared firmly.
"Are you mad?"
"I would be to go with the situation what it is here. Don't you see that, un-less those jewels are returned to Mrs. Gosnold tonight—yes, I mean the jewels you were so ready to accuse me of steal you were so ready to accuse me of stan-ing a little while ago; but you seem to have forgotten that now—"
"I wish you would," Mrs. Standish re-plied, schooling her voice to accents of dulcet entreaty. "I was beside myself with anxiety—"

"Wait. If I go before those jawels are recovered—disappear, as you want me to—it will be equivalent to a confession that I myself stole them. And suppose

What!" "I say, suppose I did, for the sake of argument. What right have you to assume that I didn't commit the theft? No more than you had to accuse me as you did. And until the theft is made good, what right have you to let me go and, possibly, get away with my loot? No!" Sally shook her head. "You're not

No!" Sally shook her head. "You're not logical, you're not honest with me. There's something behind all this. I'm not going to be made a scapegoat for you. I'm not going to run away now and hide simply to further your plans for swindling the burgiar insurance company. I'll see Mrs. Generald and advise with her here." Gosnold and advise with her before I "Oh. you s she trembled visibly.

But what else she might have said to the deflant girl was cut short by the audden and uncerementous opening of the door to admit three sersons.

The first and last of these were Mercedes Prids and Mr. Lytiston. Petween them entered a man unknown to Sally, a hard-featured citizen in very ordinary business clothing, cold of eye, incompromising of manner.

Jubilation glowed in the witch's glance: anticipative relish of the flavor of triumph lent her voice a shriller note. She struct an attitude, singing out Sally with a sanunciatory arm.
