Mrs. Standish had fallen back on the interruption and now half stood, half rested against the dressing table, her passion of a moment ago sedulously dis-sembled. She arched an inquiring eye-brow and smiled an inscrutable smile, questioning the proceedings without al-together disapproving them. Nearer Sally than any of these, the strange man confronted the girl squarely, appraising her with an unprejudiced gaze. "If you please—" she appealed directly to him.

to him. "Miss Manwaring, I believe?" he responded with a slight, semidifident nod. Silently Sally inclined her head.

"That's the name she gave when she came here, at least," Mercedes comented. Sally addressed Lyttleton. "Please shut the door," she said quietly, and as he obliged her, looked back to the stranger.

"Mason's my name, miss," he went on; operative from Webb's Private Investi-ation Agency, Boston, Mrs. Gosnold spation Agency, Boston. Mrs. Gosnold sent for me by long-distance telephone this morning. for Miss Manwaring." Sally drew a deep breath. At all events, the woman had not dared to re-peat any of her former abominable ac-usations. If she was unfriendly, she was also committed to a neutral atti-tude. No more talk of a forged letter, no more innuendo concerning Sally's "acomplice" of the night before. There was a pause. The detective scratched his head in doubt. "All this is very irregular," he deprecated vaguely. Miss Pride opened her mouth to speak. but Lyttleton sllenced her with but Lyttleton silenced her with a mur-mured word or two. She sniffed resent-fully, but held her peace. "I can't accept your apology," Sally returned with dignity. "But I'm sure you have no longer any excuse for annoying me." But Mr. Mason held his ground. "The trouble is." he insisted, "after those cards had beep read, one of the gentlemen said he had seen you out in the sarden be-tween 2 and 3 o'clock." "Mr. Lyttleton!" Sally accused with a lip of scorn. 'Why, yes," the detective admitted. Mrs. Standish made a furlous gesture, but contrived to refrain from speech. a distasteful task. "Well" Sally insisted coolly. "Still you've given me no reason for this out-rageous intrusion and accusation."

"No, miss; I'm coming to that. You see, the first thing was to get that letter-box opened and examine those envelopes. I got several of the gentlemen to act I got several of the generation to act as a sort of a committee, so as nobody could kick on the ground that everything woan't done open and aboveboard." "You found no confession, I gather?" Mrg. Standish interpolated.

"No. ma'am; no confession. All but two of the cards were blank. The two had something written on them-abony-mous information, so to speak. I brought them along so that Miss Manwaring them along so that along an warwarms would understand, in case there was any mistake, it wasn't my fault." He fumbled in a pocket, brought forth the cards, and with some hesitation handed them over to Sally. Both bore measages laboriously printed in neurol of much the same fenor:

n penell of much the same tenor: "Suggest you look into Miss Manwar-ng's antecedents; also her action between and 3 o'clock last night.' "Ask Miss Manwaring what she was doing out of bed after 1 last night-search of her room might prove helpful. Silently Sally returned the cards. "You see." the detective apologized neavily. "after that there wasn't anything for it but to ask you to explain."

"There is nothing to explain; the charge is preposterous." "There!" Alles Pride Interpolated in ac-cents of acid satisfaction. "If she has nothing to fear, why should she object?" "Do he quiet, Mercedes." Mrs. Sum-dish advised sweetly. "Miss Manwaring is quite right to object, even if innecent."

"Yes, miss; that is, I hope so, for your sake. All the same, I had to ask you. Most of the gentlemen present when 1 opened the envelopes seemed to think ought to do something at once. Per-sonally, I'd rather have consulted Mrs. Gosnold before putting it up to you this
