MOVING UP THE MOVIES INFANT industries are not always the ones to need protection. The husky Movie kid has never needed the protection of its "legitimate" mother of the sock and buskin since its earliest cradle days. Already in these few years it has ceased to be a kid, and in its one or two decades of life the moving-picture show has actually come to threaten seriously the pre-eminence of the "legitimate" drama, whose sway reaches back through the centuries. past the Middle Ages into the Golden Age of Greece, and further back into the shadowy archives of tradition.

Of a dozen articles on theatrical subjects in the current magazines half are concerned with "movies." The most significant of these is by Bernard Shaw. the famous dramatist, who outlines a splendid and glowing future for the movie show in the Metropolitan (1).

The effect of the film drama on the spoken drama is very potent. By accustoming the poorest playgoers to genuine realism in scenery at so low a cost of representation and reproduction that our film companies can afford to spend sums on the original production that would ruin the most princely actor-manager, it reduces the would-be deceptive realistic scenery of the spoken drama to absurdity, both artistically and economically, and thereby gives a powerful and elevating impulse to the restoration of the conditions under which the theatre attained its highest and freest point. Film drama will compete so successfully with the spoken drama that it will drive it to its highest ground and close all paths to it except those in which its true glory lies; that is, the path of high human utter-ance of great thoughts and great wit, of poesy and of prophecy. Or, as some of our more hopelessly presaic critics call it, the path of Talk.

and cinematograph. I have heard a film sing, and wished it wouldn't; but that was the fault of the original singer. I have heard a film talk through a short scene quite amusingly and successfully. I have watched a long film drama and thanked heaven that the hero and heroine could not talk, for I knew only too well that they would bore me with sentimental twaddle, and that if they once began they would drive their audience back to the circus, where the acrobats seldom disenchant us by opening their mouths. But I once saw an excellent film in which Sarah Bernhardt figured as Queen Elizabeth. It was in a small town on the Welsh border, to which it could never have paid any manager to bring so expensive a star. When they can see and hear Forbes Robertson's "Hamlet" equally well produced, it will be possible for our young people to grow up in healthy remoteness from the crowded masses and slums of the big cities without also growing up as savages.

I am not forgetting the technical possibilities of the synchronized phonograph

I shall not be at all surprised if the cinematograph and phonograph turn out to be the most revolutionary inventions since writing and printing, and, indeed, far more revolutionary than either, for the number of people who can read is small, the number of those who can read to any purpose much smaller and the number of those who are too tired after a day's work to read without falling asleep enormous. But all except the blind and deaf can see and hear, and when they begin to see farther than their own noses and their own nurseries people will begin to have some notion of the sort of world they are living in, and then we, too, shall see-what we shall see.

WHY NOT PERPETUAL MOTION PICTURES? With a pretense at condescension, but, in reality, with an undercurrent of appreciation, Francis Hackett writes of the movies in the New Republic (2): Most conservatives still see the "movie through the noisy gloom of the first firetrap theatres. The "movie" in their eyes is a theatrical tintype. They observe its vogue, but they also observe the vogue of chewing gum. And, as they recken it, the "movie" is in a class with chewing

To assume a lofty air about chewing gum would not be sincere on my part. Still, as one of the mortals to whom it was never anything more than an avoca-tion, conducted in timid privacy, I recollect it as perhaps the least delectable of uselessnesses. Combining the maximum of activity with the minimum of effort, of activity with the minimum of enter, it seems to be the supreme example of lost motion, and on that ground alone I disdain it. On similar ground, though they are equally dear to millions of Americans, one criticises the average moving pictures. Popular though they are, the conservatives are justified in contemning them. Incapable of assimilation, they are, for the most part, mental

It is no apology to say that they are "popular." It was once popular to dress like an undertaker in summer, to sleep in a stuffy bedroom, to regard a woman who smoked as a prostitute, to be lugu-brious on Sunday. A custom or a taste is not entitled to respect because it is popu-

But where the conservatives go astray about the movies is in assuming that be-cause the invention has been unsatisfactorily utilized it is not proved capable the most wonderful utilization. They fail to appreciate the illimitable artistic, the illimitable social possibilities of the moving picture. The movies have broken a window into the blank waif of myris minds. They have spread a thousan worlds at the feet of the simplest special Stories of the adventures and hairbreadth escapes encountered in producing many of the films are fully as thrilling as the films themselves. Cleveland Moffett is writing a ceries of articles for the American Magazine (3), describing such adventures. He quotes a story told by Carl Gregory, veteran camera man of the Thanhouser Com-

"One of the first big motion picture stunts I remember was when we sent a White steam automobile at full speed over the steepest part of the Pallandes and let her amash down with a wicked nobleman inside (played by a dummy). a scoundrel who had choked and beaten his young and beautiful American wife and had flercely pursued her when she was rescued by a gallant American lover in his automobile. There were five operators with cameras waiting for the smaab-up, one man at the top of the Palisades to get the car as she toppled over the precipice and four of us down at the bottom on the shore of the Hudson River, with our machines pointed up at various angles. When we heard the director shout we began turning our machines, and each one of us got a section of the fall. We had filled up the steamer's tank with gasoline, in the hope that she would explode in the air as she turned over, and sure enough she did. I got a picture showing the automobile shooting straight out from the rock wall, then a clear somersault, then with a smash of black smoke, blowing herself into a thousand pieces. One of these, a heavy chunk of steel, whizaed by my head and buried itself in the ground. We gave the wreck to a policeman, who sold it for $40,"

THE HIGH COST OF BEAUTY Musical comedy in the Broadway sense is another comparatively modern development. Judson Stuart discusses the problem of pleasing "the tired business man" from an interestingly technical and matter-of-fact point of view in the Theatre (4). Without any attempt to go into the psychology of it all, the fact remains that psychology of it all, the fact remains that the so-called, much-maligned and over-worked "tired business man" finds more pleasure and restfulness in looking at a galaxy of really beautiful girls than he does in watching the most intricate dance steps or listening to some tuneful little song. It wasn't so many years ago that a keen producer sat down and tried to figure out why his show was not makto figure out why his show was not making the same brilliant success as that of a rival. They were practically the same, a sort of jolly musical comedy, with more melange than plot.

"Find out for me," he said to his assistant. "But, how?" hopelessly inquired the young man. 'If people didn't know me so well I'd do it myself and show you. The only way to find out is to talk with the people. way to find out is to talk with the people, Go over there and listen to them between the acts. Go into the cafes and listen to them. Get into conversation with them, especially with the middleaged, solid men, the men who can and do afford theatre tickets. Then come back here and do the same with our patrons. There's some reason; we've got the best singers and the best denears. the best singers and the best dancers; we've got more comedy and 'go' and more plot,"

When the young man made his report he did so in a few words. 'They've got a bunch of queens over there, while we've got a bunch of frights," he said. "But our show is better—" "All they talk about over there is the good-lookers. All they do here is to knock the choru "But it is real music, every one has a good voice—" "Aw, they don't even mention the ringing; they knock the chorus because it's a bunch of frights."

The producer had his show changed over a little, changed the name, let all the girls go. Every new girl he engaged was a beauty. It was not long before he was "standing them up" every night. Tickets were selling eight weeks ahead. And from that time on the cost of stage beauty began to soar. Other producers saw a great light. If the patrons wanted beauty, they would get it. Ten years ago, yes, even six years ago, a chorus of 35 girls would cost the producer about $600 per week. Today a chorus of 35 girls will deduct at least $1200 from the week's profits. In other words, there is a High Cost of Beauty, and that cost is nearly twice what it was a few years ago.

There is a quaint description of some old-time favorites in Scribner's (5):
I recently discovered at the bottom of a box of old keepsakes, which had not a box of old keepsakes, which had not seen the light in many a year, a little photograph showing four doll-like fig-ures standing in a row, two they men in dress suits and two tiny ladies in low-necked satin gowns, holding elaborate lace handkerchiefs in their infinitesimal white-gloved fingers. General Tom Thumb white-gloved fingers. General Tom Thumb and his wife, Commodore Nutt and Minnie Warren! When had I thought of them and of the breathless delight of those evenings? * * I do not remember much that they did, except that General Tom Thumb sat astride a chair and winked his eye and said things that the grown-up people laughed at. * * Minnie Warren, with her bewitching dark curis, her exquisite features so perfect in shape and delicate in color, her dolin shape and delicate in color, her in shape and delicate in color, her doli-like figure and her tiny hands and feet. She always wore a pink satin gown with a beautiful spreading train that fell over the sides of the little elevated board-walk on which they all promensded down the centre gisle during the intermission while they sold their photographs. I re-member actually touching that shimmering train with my finger when she swept by my seat at the end of the aisle. Municipal Band Concert Tonight The Municipal Band will play at 68th street and Girard avenue tonight instead of in Durham Park, as originally sched-
