JUNE BRIDES' WEDDING RINGS COST

Bridegrooms Often Wear Them, Too-How to Tell a Woman's Character by the Ring She Selects.

The wedding ring clerk wears one, not because it is his business or just because he happens to be married, but because it's all the style.

wedding ring purchasers furnishes him with some entertaining bits of philosphy. "You can always tell what kind of a wife a woman is going to make," is one of the conclusions he has come to as the result of his 12 years of observation, "by the way she selects her wedding ring. she wants a big and showy one and is proud to death of the new station in life that awaits her, she's the real womanly woman. Her home is going to be her kingdom with her husband as monarch. "On the other hand if she wants a small inconspicuous band, one which she can wear around her neck without it being a dead weight, you can be pretty sure she has some notions in back of her head of continuing a career, or of 'managing' her husband. She'll pull the purse-strings and he the all-round boss.

"Another thing that you notice," he continued, "when you've been in this business for some time, is that the elder a man gets the more sentimental he gets, and the less he minds showing the whole world how he regards his adored one. "Only the other day a gray-haired man of about 50 came in with a sweet young thing clinging to his arm. The inscription that he had engraved on the ring was: God knew I was lonely and he sent you to me. I thank Him."

"Mispah," according to the wedding ring clerk, is the inscription most frequently used. It is taken from the story of Jacob in the Bible and means: "The Lord watch between me and thee." The initials of the man and woman are also commonly used.
"But so often," said the clerk, "they make the mistake of wanting to say J. B. to M. S.' The 'to' is absolutely wrons for a wedding ring, though it is all right for an engagement ring. The wedding ring should have the initials intertwined or they should be connected with the 'and.' They are both being married and the ring is a sign of union."

In many cases queer hieroglyphics, which even the experienced clerk cannot decipher, are used as an inscription, and this usually indicates some cherished secret sentiment.

Wedding rings range in price from $4 to $100. The inexpensive ones are plain gold circlets, made of 15 and 22 karat gold. Those in stock are virtually all the very narrow kind.
