A Few of the Vexing Questions About the Etiquette of Marriage Expenses Answered. Costumes, Motors, Invitations, Etc.

Who pays for what when a wedding is n the air? Does the bride, or her father, have to look after the vehicles which convey the bridal party to the church door. or is this a part of the bridegroom's expenses? And how about the church music and decorations? To whose account are they charged?

Aiso, what does the bridegroom wear if the wedding is before 6 in the evening and what if it is after? How does the bridal party form? These are a few of the vexing questions that arise every June. Many u bride has run around distractedly trying to get the formidable etiquette straight-ened out so that things would run moothly at the biggest moment of her life. The prospective bridegroom is in blissful ignorance of all such matters. usually expecting his flances to coach him at the last minute. To begin with the question of wedding expenses, a cynical authority of the mas-culine persuasion phrases the formula in this wise: She, or her father, pays for the day. erything preceding the ceremony, and father pays for everything prebride's father pays for everything pre-ceding the ceremony, excepting the bou-quets. These the bridegroom must fur-nish. One for the bride, one for each of her attendants, one for her mother and one for his-an order of some magnitude, however you figure it out. Likewise the bride provides the boutonieres for the bridegroom, his best man and the ushers. To go into full details the bride's fam-ily has been expected from time immemorial to provide the engraved invitations which herald the guests to the church, and also for the linens for the new home, Next, the motors or carriages which convey the palpitating bride and her party to the church are part of the ex-penses charged to the bride's side of the convey the party to the ouse. Add to this the cost of the church decorations, the organist's and singers' remuneration and the warden's fee. Add again, the cost of the sifts to the brides naids and the collation which TOROWA maids and the contains which convest the marriage and you have the expenses in toto of Gwendolyn's paps. The bridsgroom, for his part, in addi-tion to the bridal bouquets, pays, of course, the minister's fee, which is sel-dom less than $10. That "lets him out" until the business of life begins in earnest,

The costume of the bridegroom and his ushers can be dismissed with a word. If the wedding is before 6 in the evening after June 1 at 423 North 5th street. Mrs. Boal will be remembered as Miss Florence Anna Bell, daughter of Mrs. Eleanor K. Bell, of Hunting Park ave-nue and 8th street. they wear the regulation black cutaway coat with waistcoat to match, gray striped trousers, small wing collar, four-in-hand tie of gray silk, with gloves and galters of the same color. A boutonniers composed of a white carnation, gardeniz or rosebud with a few sprigs of liles of the valley is also worn. The bride's costume for an evening ceremony does not differ from that for formation of the bridal party in the vestibule of the church and their approach to the altar, a proceeding which usually strikes terror in the heart of the participants, is really after all a very simple affair.

The ushers, two by two, lead the procession, followed by the bridesmaids, also in pairs. The maid of honor comes next, with the bride on the arm of her father following. If there are flower girls they should precede the bridesmaids, or they may walk immediately in front of the pride, following the maid of honor.

The bridegroom, accompanied by his est man, comes from the right-hand side of the chancel when the brids is half-way up the aisle. When she arrives at the altar he steps forward to her side; the attar he scipe forward to her side; the father relinguitables her and takes his place in back of her. The ushers, bridge-maids and flower girls stand in equal numbers at either side of the chancel. The maid of honor atands next to the father, ready to hold the bridg's bou-quet or adjust her yell.

After the father has given the bride in narriage he takes his place in the pew eside his wife. When the ceremony is over the bride and bridegroom lead the procession down the slate, the wife lean-ing on her husband's right arm. They are followed by the flower girls, the maid of honor and the best man, side by side, and the bridesmaids and then the ushers. The bride's people sit on the laft side of the church and the bridegroom's on
