

SCENES FROM WAR-TORN FRANCE, WHICH TODAY OBSERVES THE ANNIVERSARY OF FALL OF THE BASTILLE

FAMOUS COMMANDER AND HIS OFFICERS
General Gallieni (wearing medals) was in command of the Paris garrison at the time it was hurled upon the Germans at the battle of the Marne.

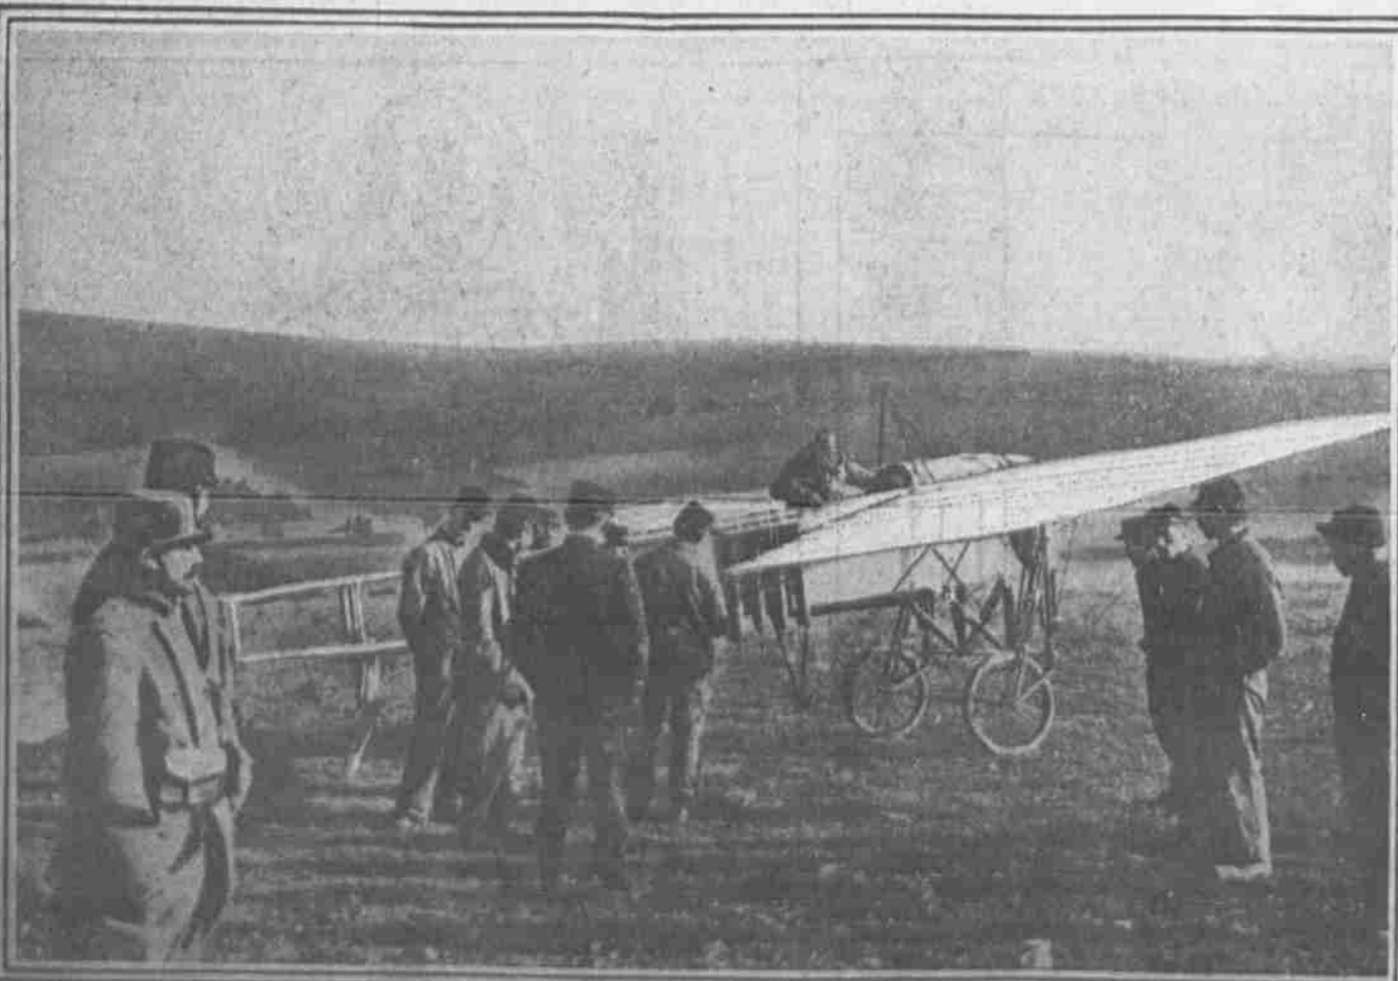

HONORS PAID TO HEROES OF BATTLE AT REVIEW IN PARIS
General Gallopin is shown kissing one of the soldiers who have just been decorated for gallantry in action. The ceremonies took place at the Place des Invalides, where the tomb of Napoleon is situated, while all Paris looked on and applauded. The men decorated include members of all branches of the service. Some of them are wounded.

RUSSIAN HIGH PRIEST BLESSES AMBULANCES PRESENTED TO FRENCH ARMY Photo by Medem.
The Russian Society recently made a gift to the French Government of a completely equipped ambulance corps. At the ceremonies of presentation all residents of Russian blood attended, including prominent ecclesiastics.

THE SIDEWALK CAFES OF PARIS IN WAR TIME Photo by Underwood & Underwood.
Not even the ever-present gloom of the overhanging war cloud has driven the inhabitants of the capital away from their favorite places of refreshment. Few men of military age, however, are visible.

PEGOU, FAMOUS FRENCH AVIATOR, PREPARES FOR FLIGHT OVER ENEMY'S LINES
Most idealized of aviators in France is this daring pilot, whose fame was already widespread before the war began. Just behind the aviator's hand a row of bombs—long, slender and pointed—can be seen. A lever drops them.

BRITISH CAVALRY HALT TO QUESTION TOILING FRENCH PEASANT Photo by Underwood & Underwood.
They are some of the strange figures which war has cast upon the face of sunny, peaceful France. The scene is typical of the French farming country—long, rolling hills covered with squares and rectangles of green-marking-growing crops.
