you?" he says to lke.
"I sure am." says Small, "Think I want that wild Indian leading off in the ninth? I should say not!"
You'd have thought the crowd could have seen what we was up to, and appreciated it; but the noise got worse and worse, and there was the Flea, squatting at the plate, skinning his teeth,

Mr. Biggs, who ells the story, is airing a righteous grievance against the Small, manager of the Bellinghams, with whem he first broke into fast company as a pitcher. He tells of his first day, when Small took him out for practice, practice.

Schall taught him a lot of real baseball. The Bellinghams have for rivals the Titusville team. Of the latter Jimmy Daugherty, the 'Fics.' is the star player. He is so small that it is impossible to pitch to him.

In the final series between these two feams Biggs, the teller of the story, is sent in to pitch the final game, on which the pennant depends. Bigms outguesness the "Fics."

For six limings neither side pores, but in the seventh Biggs team makes die run. Ike small then directs Biggs to mass the opposing pitcher so as to bring Dougherty up with two out, instead of at the head of the batting in like limits.

"It sure is," says I. "Ike, you got a great head." I didn't know then what great head he had, but I found out

"You tell Pete," says Small, "so he'll understand."

I moved over beside Pete Blaney, and told him about it. Maybe I sort of let him think it was my idea, and Pete sinpped me on the back, and said that sinpped me on the back, and said that John McGraw himself never thought of anything cuter. I don't know why I didn't give lke credit for the scheme; it was an awful bad break, as you'll see after a while. And I've never been able to decide whether or not lke had an idoa that I'd let Pete think it was my notion. It would be like him to lack that for about the fire about the see after a product of the lack that for about the fire about the see abou my notion. It would look that far ahead.

While all this was going on the Titus-ville bunch was retiring the side. Ike's one run was all we got out of it, but I figured the way I was going that an ace was enough to win with.

While all this was going on the Titusville bunch was retiring the side. Ike's one rin was all we got out of it, but I figured the way I was going that an ace was enough to win with.

Well, it worked out just as we planned.
I got McLaurin on four pitched balls, and Harrigan on three. Mac fanned, and Harrigan was thrown out at first. He went after a low curve.

"It's all over now!" the crowd began to yell. They always did that when Anstruther came to bat. Everybody in the world knew that he didn't even try to hit.

The old fellow ambled up there with his head down. I felt kind of sorry for him, he locked so discouraged and dragged out like. You can't blame him much, because he had been pitching grand ball—almost as good as me—and that one run hurt. I reckon they sent him to bat to make the third out and clear the track for the Flex.

I signed Pete Blancy, and he walked out a foot to the side. I tossed up a ball

"You better go 'way from there, James," I says to him, "If you want to enjoy good health this winter."

"You may be able to drive mules, you ig, lep-eared teamster." says he to be, "but you got a fat chance to drive ne." With a lot more that wouldn't printed even if I wrote it in, which 'All right, James." I says, as cool as Say, you ought to have heard the roar they let out. And that was one time when I was listening.

I am now: "don't let nobody scare you. Hold your head just where it is now, and your friend'll say a lot of pretty things about you, but you won't blush And that was one time

I saw right away that they didn't un-derstand the play, and of course it was me they blamed. That's all bunk about the fans catching onto the fine points of the game. They think with their eyes, confound 'em! They only know what they see, and half the time they see He snarled, but he didn't budge an inch, and I made up my mind I'd drive him away from that plate if I had to bust his head wide open. I signed Pete for the fast one in the groove, and started to wind up. As I was fetching her back to let fly, Jimmy stepped away from the plate and brought the hast up. I tuesed up another wide one, and from the plate, and brought the bat up around his neck. It was too late then, but before the ball was out of my hand I knew I'd been sucker enough to let there was another fearful beich from ne stands. "Hey, what you trying to do? Throw him kid me into doing the very thing he Well, I was disgusted, but I reckened the scener I got through with it the better, and I lobbed two more. Old An-struther walked, and none too tickled about it, as I could see. "Going to spike our best gun, ain't vous", be mays to ke.

I knew I'd been sucker enough to let him kid me into doing the very thing he wanted me to from the beginning. Well, I gave him the best I had, and all I had—a sweet one, straight as a gun barrel, and exactly in the spot where he looked for me to put it. And he swung like the kick of a mule.

Honest, I didn't know the little cuss could do it. All season I'd seen him chopping short and bunting, and I'd kind of got the notion fixed in my head that he couldn't swing. He could, though, and the haymaker he took at that ball would have done credit to a man three times his size—bam! Welt, you know what happens to a fast ball when you tie into it right, and Jimmy hit that one square on the nose.

Dave Tucker, out in the field, wasn't expecting it, of course. Why whould he expect it with that little burglar never hitting the ball out of the diamond? Then again he might have been saleep, or out of luck, or something. He never saw the ball at all until it passed him, loping down to second like a lame came, and Jimmy Dougherty was rounding first, yelling to Lefty for the love of Mike to pick 'em up fast and set 'em down far apart, and leave room for a fellow to run that could run. They went to third like a tanuem team, and from there home Jimmy was prodding the old man every jump. If the ball got back at all I never saw it, because about that time I noticed that a few million people were busting into the diamond from the grand stand, and they mostly seemed headed my way. I didn't stop to argue with 'em. It struck me that it might get sort of sickly for me arcund there, and I put out for

McDONALD TO GO WEST

Irish-American Shot Putter to Leave New York Next Week.

Pat McDonald, of New York, did not accompany the Irish-American team West, as was expected. Hig Pat will leave for Frisco next week if he can make arrangements to get away. Ed Fraser tore off his first champion ship victory at Schenectady last Saturday. Lawson Robertson is confident that Fraser will develop considerably, and be much faster by next winter.

Homer Baker, the international half-mile champion, is reported as being quite undecided about making the trip to Friesc. Homer don't want to miss that trip, and at the same time he don't want to start in the national 880 on one leg. W. Powe, the crack colored boy, ran his usual clever race in the 850 at the juniors at Scheneciady last Saturday. Powe nosed out Jim Peesso, of the N. Y. A. C. for third position.

BAKER AGAIN JUMPS ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 12,-J. Franklin Baker, formerly with the Ath-letica, has signed a contract with Morgan-ton, in the Western North Carolina League, for the remainder of the season, according to a message from Morganton. Baker's salary will be $50 a day. The league is a semiprofessional organization and the paid admissions to a game average little more than Baker's salary per day. The Morganton Club is backed by A. M. Kistler, a millionaire manufac-turer, who is a reduct fan and who cares nothing for expenses if his team wins.
