Rifles Revolvers ..... 153,000 Artillery ammunition ... 1,015,000 rounds

An imperative demand that the nation begin the most thorough preparation for the conduct of a war by gathering in every storehouse in the land immense re-serves of ammunition and supplies, by organizing its productive manufactories and by looking with keenest scrutiny to the protection of our coasts, was made to-day by Brigadier General J. Campbell Gilmore, of the N. G. P. General Glimore has been active in military matters almost since the close of the Civil War. Ho built up the existing militia after the Spanish-American War and is today one of the foremost military advisers of the ivilian force.

"In this time of crying need for a organization of our army and navy us not lose sight of the necessity for equipping this force." he said. "The foremost students of military conditions point out that we need a potential trained army of 1,000,000 men to assure ourselves of na tional safety. It is not necessary to delva into the minute calculations by which this number was obtained. Suffice it to point out that we have 27 home ports and harbors to defend. Presuming that 5000 of the enemy are about to attack us at a point not known with certainty, we find that we cannot be secure unless we have the same number on each side of each harbor and port and have an additional 1000 men between every two ports.

"In actuality it is probable that at least 200,000 men would comprise the invades's force. Under this circumstance no less than 1,000,000 men would have to be pre-pared to resist the attack.

"In addition to these forces we should have need for mines, searchlights, power plants and guns for our coast defenses not less than 144,000 men. Taking all the necessities into consideration, it will be found that 1,000,000 men will be but the minimum force with which we can hope to prevent an enemy from ravishing the coast of our cobulty. wast of our country, "We have deluded ourselves with
