Evening Z Ledger

PUBLIC LEDGER COMPANY CTRUS R. R. CURTIS, PRESIDE H Ludington, Vice Freedent; John C Martin, and Treasurer; Philip S. Collins, John B.

EDITORIAL BOARD Craca H. S. Cenvis, Chairman. P. H. WHALET...... Executive Editor IN C. MARTIN. General Business Manager Published daily at Puntry Lesons Building.

Bos Squars, Philadelphia

Broad and Chestian Building

Press Union Building

170-A Metropolitan Tower

400 Globs Democrat Building

1202 Tribmic Building

Waterloo Clace, Pall Mall, S. W.

BURSCRIPTION TERMS
Dang Only, six cents. By mail, postpair five old as well as new address changed must BELL: 3000 WALNUT KEYSTONE, MAIN 1000 ET Address all communications to Frening Ledger, Independence Square, Philadelphia.

SHIBBED AT THE PHILADELPHIA POSTOFFICE AS SECOND-

THE AVERAGE NET PAID DAILY CIRCULA-TION OF THE EVENING LEDGER FOR JULY WAS 92,334.

PRILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1915.

Youth in search of amusement should profit by the fate of the fly that lost its

Rie in a plate of molasses. Harmony Not Yet in the Offing IT SEEMS to be about as long a way to harmony as the song says it is to Tipperary. David H. Lane said in Atlantic City date to solidify the party and prove to the nation that this is a Republican city. Senator Vare says that they did not agree, and McNichol says that he does not believe Lane said it. And harmony goes whistling down the wind without even a South Phila-that they all agreed on Smith as the candi-delphia pig hanging to its coattalis. And one cannot help thinking of the epitaph on the three weeks' old baby when he considers the Smith boom. It reads, as every one remembers: It is so soon that I am done for, I wonder what I was begun for.

And the boom for Smith was not even three weeks old.

"Au Revoir but Not Good-by"

VESTERDAY dawned cold and jitless on the Philadelphia streets. No more was heard the merry and menacing emphasis of the fitney's little horn, no more the friendly sign was seen. By noon three venturesome drivers were arrested and an incipient insurrection was checked. The jitney seems to be no more.

Yet it will be hard to persuade Philadelphians that they are to be deprived, through legal technicality, of a service which they really want, and which provided them with a pleasure as unexpected as it was inexpensive. To those who lived within the jitney radius the change from crowded elevated trains and leisurely street cars was a great blessing. Many who lived far from the main litney lines took a combination jitney and street car ride to their homes after their day's work. Following the first inrush of fitneys, the extension of hired car service, at reasonable rates or less, supplied a method of recreation comparable only to taking a facre in Paris. In a hundred ways the jitney has served the city.

Now the city is serving the jitney rather mrvily, it will seem to the unblased. Regulation, if it is for the safety of pedestrians and patrons, is desirable for the jitney. But regulation which is prohibitive is a little tainted with the unsanctified odor of con-

Are There Fairies?

THE good souls who supervise-and entertain-the kiddies in the summer playgrounds are concerned at an unusual wave of juvenile skepticism. Tales of facry are part of the daily diversion. Would you believe it, the up-to-date youngster scouts Grimm, Andersen and Perrault. He sometimes she -asks to be "shown." And a couple of grieved teachers have asked the Evening LEDGER to bring the power of the printed word to disconcert the doubters and to enable those of more faith to say triumphantly, "I told you so!"

So answering the eternal childish query we asseverate that there ARE fairles. Why, it is as heretical to doubt their being as to question the personality of Santa Claus.

Many persons, who can be believed, think they have seen the fairies. They are never quite sure, of course, for the fairies are so elusive, so fragile, so flitting. That is what makes them so mysterious-their faculty of coming to those who are good enough to see them, yet leaving the witnesses just a bit unsure as to the vision.

Sometimes in the summer night the songs of the fairies may be heard; sometimes in lovely rustic spots the rings in which their revels have been held are visible to early risers before the dew dries on flower and

But these sights and sounds, like the Grail in the Parsifal legend, are only for the truly good in heart and large in faith. If all of us. and not merely dreamers and poets and children, were eligible to glimpse them, through our kindness, gentleness, forethought, how much better our worksday world would be!

Ship From Philadelphia

Chartence W. Barron conducted a nation-wide advertising campaign for the New Haven Railroad, based on the catch line "Sall from Boston," and conducted it so successfully that when he planned to go to rope his family, convinced by the arguents in his advertisements, insisted that ha should take the ship at Boston instead of going to New York for it.

Director Meigs, of the Department of Wharves, Docks and Ferries, is persuaded that the same sort of an advertising campaign should be conducted for the benefit of this port, and that the catch line should be Ship from Philadelphia."

if it were managed in the right way the business men in this part of the country would soon find it impossible to resist the pressure of the suggestion and the business of the port would boom. There is a large mid rich country tributary to Philadelphia. This is the natural shipping port for its fac-tories. They send hundreds of millour of dollars' worth of goods to Europe, to coust parts and to the Pacific, but they do not take advantage of the facilities near at hand.

iling it are provided, or soon could be made adequate to the largest expansion of trade. And the result of such utilization of the water highway at our doors would benefit both this city and those who use it in all the rest of the Commonwealth. But this business will not come here unless we go out to get it.

Is Germany Seeking More Trouble?

THE gravity of the crisis precipitated by the sinking of the Arabic must not be underestimated. The principle involved is the same as that which was involved in the Lusitania case. Neither the Lusitania nor the Arabic was a warship. All the international agreements and customs have prescribed that when a belligerent merchant ship is attacked the passengers and crew should first be allowed to escape with their lives. The Lusitania was sunk without warning and the lives of more than one hundred Americans were lost.

The note to Germany, demanding reparation for this outrage, set forth the rights of neutral noncombatants, and continued;

Friendship itself prompts it (the American Government) to say to the Imperial Government that repetition by the commanders of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the Government of the United States, when they affect American citizens,

This was on July 21. Less than a month later, on August 19, a German submarine attacks the Arabic without warning, just as the Lusitania was attacked, and sinks the ship with loss of life. There were 26 Americans on board. The early reports are that the lives of two of them have been lost. But even if no American has been killed, the attack upon the Arabic comes within the Administration's definition of an act that is "deliberately unfriendly."

We must assume that when the State Department has learned all the facts it will take such action as is consistent with the dignity of a great nation and with its duty to protect at any cost the lives of its citizens on the high seas.

Race Suicide for Mosquitoes

THE fly is bred in filth. It can be elim-I inated by eliminating the stuff it breeds in. Absence of flies means the presence of cleanliness. Mosquitoes, however, breed in still or stagnant water, in puddles in uneven gutters, in pools in the back yard, in swamps and small ponds. It is not so easy to swat the mosquito as the fly, but it is easy to frustrate the reproductive plans of the mosquitoes. Every one knows that a little oil spread on the surface of the breeding places will suffocate the larvae and clear the neighborhood of the pests.

The recent swarms of mosquitoes that have been annoying the city are evidence of neglect of duty on the part of the authorities, whose duty it is to appropriate money for buying and spreading the oll or for draining the ponds and filling the depressions where water gathers. The present equipment of the division of sanitation, consisting of seven barrels of oil and a few oil cans and sprayers, is woefully inadequate. When the city is governed as it should be the work of mosquito prevention in summer will be carried on as regularly as the work of snow removal in winter. Then the citizens who have to stay in town can sit on their front porches or picnic in their back yards with comfort. Although the mosquitoes do not believe in race suicide they should be assisted in bringing it about, in this neighborhood, anyway.

Misleading Casualty Reports

LTHOUGH the business of counting the Adead and wounded cannot be carried on with any degree of precision-the belligerents are fighting and not compiling statistics-the Governments are pretending to satisfy a very natural curiosity about the casualty list. An "official" list of killed and wounded and prisoners has been submitted to the French Senate, showing that the Allies have lost 1,739,000 killed, while 3,350,000 Germans and Austrians have lost their lives. The Teuton armies are said to have lost 3,885,000 by wounds, while the loss of the Allies from this cause is only 2,589,000.

Of course, these figures are incorrect. The Allies are not going to let the Germans know the extent of their losses. They are as likely to magnify them as to minimize them. In either case they would attempt to deceive the enemy. And for the same reason the Germans and Austrians will conceal or misrepresent at the present time the extent of their own casualties.

As a matter of fact no one knows today how many men have been killed or wounded, and no one can know with even an approximate degree of accuracy until long after the war is ended and the truth has been dug out of thousands of reports.

Submarined is not a verb; it's a tragedy. How did you like the jitneyless Broad street

"Suffrage first on fall ballots"-and first in the fall balloting.

America can feed the world, but what it wants to do is pacify it.

Carranza intends to annihilate Villa, but the difficulty is that talk won't do it.

As the du Ponts have to keep their powder dry, no one will charge them with watering the stock of their new company. Perhaps the President came here to get to see light in the Mexican situation Some comic artists, like some actresses, get enormous salaries, three-quarters being his eyes doctored so that he might be able taken in publicity and the rest in cash. The Brooklyn Judge who has decided that the tomato is a fruit and not a vegetable ought to be asked to tell us what green

D'Annunzio and Puccini are to collaborate on the first war opera, but the long suffering public would like to know who will write

Justice Hughes has written another letter to let his friends know that he is not a candidate. But he has not yet laid himself open to the auspicion of projecting too much.

eral Joe Wheeler set an example for all men about whom reports of their engagement to marry prominent women are circulated when he said that he would consider himself highly benered to be engaged to marry the

LITERARY "HOWLERS"

"Sheepfolds"-Signs as Sources of Amusement

may be classified under the head of "howlshort, slips of this and slips of that. For inolder person."

Presently they espled a signboard on a 'public." "Bear sold here." it rend.

You know he carries two faces under one Turning a sharp corner the trio came in sight of a tumbledown house standing in a little plot of well-trampled grass. A huge board bore the inscription, "Beware the dog," warning: "Ware be the dog?"

Those Wavy Brown Eyes

are not necessarily hilarious. The schoolboy who wrote in an examination paper, "E Pluribus Unum means In God We Trust," furnished only a smile, while the novelist's description of her heroine's "wavy brown hair and eyes" is positively saddening. A definition of "howlers" will be attempted in this place, but not at this time. Just at present we must try to content ourselves with a few examples of literary "howlers" of a somewhat different kind from those cited in previous articles. This species is the product of misinterpretation of the titles of books. In the titles of books lie pitfalls for the unwary.

under the sun. In 1851 Ruskin wrote a short pamphlet on the text, "There shall be one fold and one shepherd." This, which treated of the reunion of the Protestant churches, was published as "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds"-a title which, appealing rather to the agricultural than to the clerical mind, insured a brisk circulation among farmers, those of the Scottish border especially, many of whom ordered a copy in the hope that they might glean therefrom some original hints and ideas that would be of use to them in their calling. Doubtless, on discovering their mistake, they passed the misleading-entitled brochure over to their spiritual advisers.

Maria Edgeworth's little volume called "An Essay on Irish Bulls," fell by purchase into the hands of many a son of Erin, who quoted it with delight. Although the name of the author was to him unknown the contents would doubtless, he considered, he well orth the few shillings he so willingly dis bursed; but, alas! although the spirited engraving of rampant Taurus that prefaced the essay gave delightful promise, he had but to read a few lines to find that he had become possessed of a treatise, not on bovine ruminants, but on that particular "blunder which is commonly supposed to be characteristic of the Irish nation." Nay, more, a little reflection brought home to him the fact that he himself was one of those Irishmen who, in the words of the essayist, "were designed by Providence to make bulls."

Times of Refreshing

"Times of Refreshing in Spain" was a title that commended itself to a House of Commons Select Committee engaged upon the question of public houses in Ireland, and, thinking doubtless that Spanish views on the licensing question might be adapted in somewise to the Irish temperament, they ordered several copies of the work, only to find that it was not a pamphlet on matters spirituous, but an Evangelical treatise on matters spiritual. An equally egregious blunder was perpetrated by a provincial committee, formed for the purpose of advocating temperance and prison reform, when one of their number advised the purchase of Dean Plumptre's "The Spirits in Prison," under the impression that the work dealt with the illicit traffic of spirituous liquor in Her Majesty's gaols. On discovering their mistake the committee displayed an unconscious sense of humor by directing their secretary to write to the reverend author in terms of strong expostulation for employing a title that to the majority of people could not fail to be misleading. Most of the people looked askance at "The Champion of Virtue," thinking that its purchase would but introduce them to another and inferior "Pilgrim's Progress." Her mistake the authoress was not slow to perceive, and displacing "The Champion of Virtue" by "The Old English Baron" soon secured a large circulation for her work.

A PERFECT DAY

Misleading Titles of Books, Including the Classic Example, Ruskin's

By ROBERT HILDRETH

SHOP signs and signboards furnish an in-exhaustible supply of raw material for the jokemaker's mill, which sometimes assuredly grinds exceedingly fine. Not a few of them ers," a name which covers a multitude of sins -slips of grammar, slips of intelligence, slips of tongue, slips of pen, slips of type, or, in stance, there is the warning posted in a spacious private park: "No dog allowed on these premises unless accompanied by an

Speaking of signs-and incidentally of doss -we take pleasure in retelling the story of a contest between two famous punsters, Tom Hood and Theodore Hook. One day as they passed down the street they laid a wager as to who could spring the best extempore pun. leaving the decision to their companion, Charles Mathews. The loser was to pay for supper for the trio.

"Oho!" said Hook, "I suppose that bear is his own bruin. "Good!" cried Mathews. "You'll have hard work, Tom, to beat that." "I dare say he'll do it, though," said Hook

Hood looked all about, then picked up a broken piece of brick and wrote beneath the

As to the supper it was a Dutch treat.

But puns are not "howlers" and "howlers"

There's a classic example of everything

Many sailors and lovers of the sea found themselves in strange waters when, under the impression that they were about to peruse a stirring sea romance of the Clark Russell or the Captain Marryatt type, they ordered from their l'brary Miss Beatrice Harraden's clever story, "Ships That Pass in the Night," a story into the plot or construction of which neither sea nor ship enters. Needless to say that the novelist, like the art critic and other writers previously mentioned, was quite guiltless of even the most harmless attempt to

When you come to the end of a perfect day And you sit alone with your thought. While the chimes ring out with a carul gay For the joy that the day has brought. Do you think what the end of a perfect day Can mean to a tired heart. When the sun goes down win a flaming ray And the dear friends have to part? Well, this is the end of a perfect day, Near the end of a lourney, too; But it leaves a thought that is hig and strong. With a wish that is kind and true. For men'sy has painted this perfect day With dolors that never fads, And we find, at the end of a perfect day. The soul of a friend we've made.

century. Who made up these rhymes and why certain ones get perpetuated is some-

Another phase of childhood folk lore is found in the catches we were all so fond of when young. Who invents them? Who has ever seen a new one in the making? Who was the author of the most famous, perhaps, of all? You will remember it, of course. It was most popular at just about the age when you were learning to count. You said to another boy or girl, "I saw a dead horse on Chelsea Beach. I one it." (I suppose in Philadelphia the horse was seen at some

The other boy was supposed to reply, "I

Then you said, "I three it," and so on, till the other fellow affirmed that he "eight it."

and you screamed with derisive mirth, "Oh,

Then there was the "Just like me" dis-logue, which ultimately caused the unsuspecting victim to affirm that he resembled a monkey. Another we all recall went as

Adam and Eve and Pinchme all went out to awim. Adam and Eve were drowned. Who was saved?

Nobody was likely to forget that one, after

Passing Notes in School

the actual birth of a piece of childhood jingle which shows, probably, how a good many others have originated. He says that in Enfield, Conn., a boy in school wrote something on a piece of paper and passed it around. The teacher saw the other pupils laughing, got hold of the paper and read

Three little mice ran up the stairs To hear Miss Blodgett say her prayers.

This teacher evidently had a real apprecia tion of literature, for instead of whipping

the boy she gave him five minutes to write two more lines telling what happened to the mice, or to Miss Blodgett, as the case might be. Nothing daunted, the boy turned out

I used to quote that poem in my boyhood with the name of my teacher substituted, and it never occurred to me that the verses were not as old as the very hills. They seemed always to have been handed down from generation to generation. That is the charm of folk lore, whether adult or childish.

Its origins are unknown, and it is per-

A very good illustration today is the spread of the latest Ford car story. We really have in America's genuine folk literature of the Ford car. They say it is going to be collected, which is a pity. All folk literature should remain oral for at least

THE "CARPET-BAGGER"

Discussion Aroused as to Origin of Phrase.

Remarks on the Carpet Bag Itself.

ing on a recent article in these columns:
"George W. Douglas, in the Philadelphia
Evening Lenger, credits Doctor McKelway

When Miss Blodgett said "Amen,"
-The three little mice ran down again.

the following couplet about herself:

Clifton Johnson has somewhere recorded ho, Jimmy ate a dead horse!"

it had once been played on him.

THE FOLKLORE OF "COUNTING OUT"

Children's Games That Are Passed Down From Generation to Generation With Accompanying Rhymes for Use in Determining Who Is "It"-A Dispute Among Grown-ups

By WALTER PRICHARD EATON not earlier than the first quarter of the 19th thing of a mystery.

local point.)

two it."

follows:

this sequel:

petuated by wireless.

two generations.

TOT long ago I was sitting one eve-Non iong age dinner, on the outer balcony of a city club. The daylight still lingered in the street, and I was idly smoking and watching three little girls playing on the sidewalk across the way. A man I did not know was sitting near me. After a few moments he spoke.

"Funny thing," he said, "but those girls over there have invented a game. I've sat here evenings for two weeks now and watched its evolution. They've got it completed at last. I suppose hop-scotch and all the rest got invented some time or other."

"Probably," said I. "But they seemed to have always been, didn't they?"

"Sure," said he. "Funny how they get passed down the generations. I wonder if this new game will become a tradition, too?" I have been wondering since if other games have not been invented in our congested modern cities, games which we as children know nothing about, games which are the result of the peculiar new environment. Possibly somebody has investigated the subject and written about it, but I haven't chanced to see the report. Will these games persist in tradition, as the old ones have persisted? The field is really a fertile one for somebody who loves curious and pleasantly unimportant subjects! Variation and Vexation

After the man on the balcony and I no longer had the new game to watch we fell talking about games of our own childhood, and especially about counting out rhymes. We soon discovered that there evidently exists a considerable variation in these rhymes. Our discussion of one of them, in fact, nearly precipitated a quarrel.

Acker, backer, soda cracker, Acker, backer, boo!

My father chews tobacker, Out goes you. "No," said I. "That is obviously wrong. It isn't the counter's father who indulges in the filthy habit, but the father of the person who is counted out. There is scorn in the line. You have completely missed the subtlety of this rhyme. Nor is the charge made directly. The third line goes this way: Out goes you.

"Not at all," said the other man. "In the days when that rhyme came into being there was no shame attached to the good old custom of chewing tobacco. The child, in fact, was rather proud to proclaim his parent's addiction to the weed. The line went as I

"It did not," said I.

"It did," said he.

Unfortunately, there was no third party to whom we could appeal. Still, I know that I am right! We were rather amazed as our memories ing-out rhymes we could recall between us. Some we agreed on, as the famous: Ene, mene, mini, mo, Catch a nigger by the toe, If he hollers let him go, Ene, mene, mini, mo. But another on which we differed was got to working to find out how many count-

As I was going to Salt Lake I met a little rattlesnake, He'd e't so much of jelly cake It made his little belly ache.

The other man maintained stoutly that it was ginger cake the poor snake had eaten or, not wisely, but too well. This I held to manifestly wrong, because one of the things most attractive about the rhyme, besides, of course, the excuse it gave for using the word "belly" in mixed company, was the delicious similarity of sound between "jelly cake" and "belly ache." Such similarities of sound appeal to children, as a good epigram appeals to adults or a good pun.

Who Made Them Up7

As a matter of fact, I have seen somewhere a collection of nearly 50 counting-out rhymes in use in a single section, and most of them with variants. Of course, the children do not learn them from a printed collection, though. They are passed down through the generations by oral tradition. How old are they? Who made them up in the first place? Did you ever make one up, or assist in the process? Obviously, the man who was going to Salt Lake and met the rattleenake was an American. That one must have been composed not only in this country, but since the discovery of the Great Salt Lake.

Sugine number nine. Hick your head in turpentine. Curpentine make it shine. Sugine number nine.

said, there was 'a snake in that bag;' and u was that speech which started the phrase in the newspapers. The late Dr. Joseph Brock, convention re-

"The late Dr. Joseph Brock, convention reporter for the Enquirer and Richmond corespondent for several outside papers, was questo catch the suggestion. Thereafter in many ethis reports he differentiated the members by attaching to their names, respectively, the letters 'C. B. M.,' 'S.,' 'N.' and 'W.' That is to say, he designated them severally as 'cappe." bag men' (aliens), scalawags (renegade Vinginians), negroes and 'whites,' or loyal Viginians.

The editor of the Springfield Republican rise to remark:

"Discussions by more or less elderly people as to the origin of the phrase 'carpet-bager,' or 'carpet-bag government,' in the United States, doubtless would be still more enlightening to the younger generation if they told whithe old-time carnet bag was made for. The are very young persons who never saw a cobag and who haven't the remotest idea he

"Carpet bags are not manufactured nowadaya Only in the garrets of our oldest families, posibly, can they be found poked away hopeless into dark corners. It is now amusing to reci them, for they must have antedated the line duster as a necessary article of travel. To be as educational as possible, one may say that carpet bag was just a bag made of ordinal carpeting which was used 50 years ago precise as a leather value or suitcase is today. It was as a leather value or success, with an abnormally the simplest of receptacles, with an abnormally wide mouth. And its capacity for shirts, educations and cold victors lars, stockings, underclothes and cold vic

"Not long before the Civil War Edwin I Stanton saw Abraham Lincoln on a hot de-enter the lobby of a hotel in Cincinnati. To perspiring Lincoln wore a long linen duste and, as Stanton afterward described his splotch on the back of the duster that looked like the map of Africa. Of course, Lincoln carried in his hand a carpet bag, although Stanton did not think it worth while to add that fact to his description. For every lawyer and poli-tician when traveling in those days carried his carpet bag as personal luggage. "Whether the late Editor McKelway, of the historic political phrase out of 'carpet bag' is immaterial. It is likely that the immaterial. It is likely that this literary richment of Southern politics was made also simultaneously by different political writer Office-seeking Northerners going South to hell govern that section in the period of reconstruction were naturally called carpet-baggers the Southern people, because about all t took South was easily contained in their carpet bags. Although the original article is no lon to be bought and no longer figures in comme the phrases 'carpet-bagger' and 'carpet-bag government' will doubtless last as long as the English language is spoken."

ON WITH THE SKATES

To the Editor of the Evening Ledger: Sir-I really don't know whether it is the proper thing or not to thank a newspaper for its editorials, but right or wrong, I want to say that we feel deeply grateful for your "Wel-come to the Ice Palace."

We have worked hard for a number of months to get this proposition down to lines that Philadelphians will accept, and your kindly and favorable comment acts as a balm and a stimulant. We wish further to thank you for that perfectly fine and accurate annou ment you made, together with picture, in your edition of the 17th inst. Z. U. DODGE Philadelphia, August 20.

GOVERNOR HARRIS' OPPORTUNITY To the Editor of the Evening Ledger:

SIr—A good many years ago a sturdy Governor of Wisconsin not possessed of much "book larnin" was asked what led him to take a very courageous stand on a certain important issue. He replied: "I seen my duty and I done it." That remark of Jeremiah M. Rusk amused the nation as much as his act lead won life. the nation as much as his act had won its applause. Today, Nathaniel E. Harris, Governor of Georgia, confronts a great opportunity. We do not care how badly he may outrage the rules of syntax, we do expect him to be a man. If he fears to obey the solemn oath he took less than two months are then the took less than two months ago, then torches carried by the murderers of Leo Fra will light him down in dishonor to the lat then the generation. If he shall admit by inaction that that great Commonwealth cannot punish so dastardly an affront to its honor and dignity, he will do his State a greater injury than did the cowardly mob. What would Alexander H. Stevens, Vice President of the Confederacy and a REAL Governor of Georgia, have done? Philadelphia, August 19. S. O.

NATIONAL POINT OF VIEW

Cotton as contraband will at least fare poworse in the war area than it does now.—New York World.

The first woman jitney driver has appeared in Washington. Before long they'll carry Congress.—New York Evening Sun.

"George W. Douglas, in the Philadelphia Evening Ledger, credits Doctor McKelway with having originated the term 'carpet-bagger' in politics, and first applied it to that ravenous horde of Northern Republicans who descended upon the South to prey upon her during reconstruction days. Mr. Douglas' story is that Doctor McKelway, who was noted for his opulent and descriptive vocabulary, put up the term one night over a telegram from Washington announcing that the Administration had sent a number of Northern Republicans into the South, and that Manton Marble, then editor of the World, upon seeing the proof, requested Doctor McKelway to write an editorial on the subject. This Doctor McKelway did, captioning the article 'Carpet-bag Government,' and vigorously denouncing the policy.

"Mr. Douglas' story is interesting, and no one will question that the incident occurred. But we are not so certain about his attribution. At any rate, our impression is that the first newspaper use of the term or phrase in designating the harpies referred to was in the old Richmond Enquirer, and from that paper others adopted it. The originator, however, was old Captain Parr, a Gloucester County 'sulnasman' member of the black and tan Underwood constitutional convention, which as to its majority was a hideous and conscienceless conglomerators that ever figured in politics, and in a war commanded a vocabulary as opulent and dascriptive as that of Doctor McKelway. In one visition of the Nagro with a toy he drew from his specket. The toy consistes of a little darkey time the board was lapsed with the fines. In acapther he scientify warned the convention with a toy he drew from his specket. The toy consistes of a little darkey time the board was lapsed with the fines. In acapther he scientify warned the convention with a toy he drew from his pocket. The toy consistes of a little darkey time the board was lapsed with the fines. In acapther he scientify warned the convention with a toy he drew from his pocket. The toy consistes of a little darkey "Turks Recapture Van From the Russians. In preparation for the moving season which is near?—New York Evening Post.

Being an old man and having now become accustomed to a state of war, Carranza maturally objects to anything which might compaint to change his settled habits.—Chicago

There is ample room for partisanship in the political campaign of the country, and the American citizens of all parties indulge these selves as partisans to the limit during these campaigns, but there is one field, one sphere, in which they positively prohibit partisanship and that is the sphere of defenses for our artifice country.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Washington Government is working with the utmost sincerity to amelicrate the conditions established by the informal blockeds of Germany. It will continue to protest against a policy which is both unprecedented and up justifiable. But in this endeavor it will search by be either spurred or deterred by the attempts of Senator Smith and his associates to cutor dinate national policies to the desires of the cotton growers.—Chryshard Plein Design.