By magic, as it seemed, there was a wardrobe full of fineries provided for my use. The man displayed them; in close knee breeches and long talls; costumes, be said, for the street, for driving, riding, traveling, for evening, and for morning; and one white satin court dress. At the marquis' order he had laid out one for a ball. Of my old clothes not a piece was

Mirrors were shattered, and lusters, vases, china, gold candlesticks, rolled about and were candlesticks, rolled about and were trampled on the floor. The paintings were stabbed with pikes; tables, screens, gilt stools, chairs crushed, and carpets cut to pieces; garments of all kinds strewn and torn; all that was not carried off by pillagers being thus destroyed. It was yet a horrible sight days after the may be a done its work, and slaughtered

"Did you see the Tuileries at that time,

"I did. I put on the clothes of one of my peasants, slumped in Jacquot's wooden shoes, and kept my mouth open as well as I could for the dust. The fantastic was yet in my blood. Exile takes that out of everybody except your royal uncle of Provence. But I knew in my heart what I would help do with that most if our turn ever came.

The miracle was that what he put upon me fitted me. I became transformed like my servant and my secretary, and stood astonished at the result.

"INTER the prince of a fairy tale,"

His dark eyes rested on the red wine as on a pool of blood.

"Sick of the ruin, I leaned out to look in the garden, from a window in the queen's own apartment. I stepped on a shelf, which appeared fixed under the window; but it moved, and I found that it could be pushed on grooves into the wall.

There was a cavity made to hold it. It had concealed two armchairs placed on posite each other, so cunningly that their paneled sides looked a part of the thick wall. I sat down in one of them, and though the cushion was stiff, I felt some-thing hard under it."

Monsieur du Plessy glanced around in every direction to satisfy himself that no ears lurked within hearing.

"Eh, blen! Under the cushion I found the queen's jewel case! Diamonds—bags of gold coin—a half circlet of gemu!—since the great necklace was lost such an array had not seen the light in France. The value must be far above a million france. The marquis fixed his eyes on me and said:

"What should I have done with it, Lazarre?"
"It belonged to the royal family," I answered.

"But everything which belonged to the royal family had been confiscated to the State. I had just seen the belongings of the royal family trampled as by cattle. First one tyrant and then another rose up to tell us what we should do, to batten himself off the wretched commonwealth, and then to go to the suillotine before his successor. As a good citizen. I should have turned these jewels and stones and coins over to the State. But I was acting the part of Jacquot, and as an honest person I whipped them under

I felt a clumsy giant waile he fluttered was not forgotten. He sent me of the money that he was obliged to receive in charity!"

"It is easy to dole out charity money you are squeezing other people's purses, not your own. What I most object to in the Count of Provence is that assump-tion of kingly airs, providing the story is true which leaked secretly among the emigres. The story which I heard was that the dauphin had not died, but was to have gone with my King and my friends under the knife. Often I am I told him I was not addicted to the ashamed of myself for slipping away. That I should live to see disgusting fools in the streets of Paris after the Terror "Garile is divine. God gave it to man.

You should have seen the place when it was sacked after the flight of the royal family. No, you should not have seen it!

The Marquis du Plessy drew himself together with a strong shudder. I had the desire to stand between him and the shocks of an alien world. Yet there was about him a tenucious masculine strength, an advoitness of self-protection which needed no champion.

"Did the Indian tell you about a man named Bellenger?" I inquired.

THE man raised his shoulders and elbows with gentlest dissent.

"These are only a few articles of monsleur's outfit. Here is the key. If mondauphin, and objecting to you in various delicate ways. Napoleon Bonaparte is master of Europe, because ne has a nice sense of the values of men, and the best head for detail that was ever formed human shape. There is something al-most supernatural in his grasp of affairs. He lets nothing escape him.

"The only mistake he ever made was knew in my heart what I would nelp do with that mob, if our turn ever came again.

Sweden are combining against Napoleon. He will beat them. For while other men sleep or amuse themselves or let circum-stance drive them he is planning success and providing for all possible contingen-cies. Take a leaf out of the general's book, my boy. No enemy is contemptible. If you want to force the hand of fortune -scheme!-scheme!-all the time!-out-scheme the other fellow!"

The marquis rose from the table. "I am longer winded," he said, "than a man named De Chaumont, who has been importuning Bonaparte, in season and out of season, to reinstate an American emigre, a Madame de Ferrier."
"Will Bonaparte restore her lands?" I asked, feeling my voice like a rope in my

My host boited the doors of his private cabinet and took from the secret part of a wail cupboard the Queen's jewel case. We opened it but once. The first thing I noticed was a gold anuff box, set with portraits of the King, the Queen and their two children their two children How I knew them I cannot tell. Their pictured faces had never been put before my conscious eyes until that moment. Other portraits might have been there. I had no doubt, no hesitation.

I was on my knees before the face I had seen in spasms of remembrance—with oval cheeks and fair hair rolled high and open neck-my roysi mother!

Next I looked at the King, heavier of feature, honest and straight gazing, his chin held upward; at the little sister, a smaller miniature of the Queen; at the softly moided curves of the child that was myself!

The marquis turned his back.

"These stones and coins are also my sister's, monaicur the marquis?"

He lifted his eyebrows.

"I had ample opportunity, my dear boy, to turn them into the exchequer of the Count of Provence.
