They went to church when not drunk and quarrelsome, paid the priest his dues, labored easily and cared nothing for hoarding. But every step of my new life called for coin. To see men admitting that you are what you believe yourself to be is one of the triumphs of existence. The jewel-case stamped identification upon me. 1 felt like one who had communicated with the past and received a benediction.

the past and received a benediction. There was special provision in the way it came to me; for man loves to believe God watches over and mothers him.

Forgetting-if I had ever heard-how the ancients dreaded the powers above when they had been too fortunate, I went with the marquis in high spirits to the Rue Ste. Croix. There were pots of incense sending little wavers of amoke through the rooms, and the people might have peopled a dream. The men were indeed all smooth and trim; but the women had given rein to their fancies.

Our hostess was a fair and gracious woman, of Greek ancestry, as Bonaparte himself was, and her daughter had been married to his favorite general, the marquis told me. I notice only the unusual in clothing;

the scantiness of ladies' apparel that chung like the skin, and lay upon the oak floor in ridges, among which a man

"The angels are afraid of me!" "Not when you smile." "Teach me that adorable smile of yours!" "Oh, how improving you will be to Lazarre, monsieur! He never paid me a compliment in his life. He never said anything but the truth." "The lucky dog! What pretty things he had to say!"

Annabel laughed and shook her mist in great enjoyment. I liked to watch her. yet I wondered where Madame de Fer-rier was, and could not bring myself to inquire. "These horrible incense pots choke me," said Annabei. "I like them," said the marquis.

"Do you? So do I," she instantly agreed with him. "Though we get enough incense in church."

"I trust you may come soon." They spoke of fruit and cattle. Neither dared mention the name of any human companion associated with the past. I took opportunity to ask Count de Chaumont if her lands were recovered. A baffied look troubled his face.

"The emperor will see her tonight," he answered. "It is impossible to say what can be done until the emperor sees her." "Is there any truth in the story that he will marry her to the officer who holds her estate?"

The count frowned.

"No-no! That's impossible." -"Will the officer sell his rights if Madame de Ferrier's are not acknowl-edged?" "I have thought of that. And I want

"I am here because I love you." She held a fold of the curtain in her hand and looked down at it; then up at me.

"You must not say that again." "Why?" "You know why."

"I do not." "Remember who you are."

"I am your lover." She looked quickly around the buzzing drawing room and leaned cautiously nearer.

"You are my sovereign." "I believe that, Eagle. But it does not follow that I shall ever reign."

"Are you safe here? Napeoleon Bonaparte has spies." "But he has regard also for old aristo-
