"Monsieur the Abbe Edgeworth," he said, "having stood on the scaffold with our nartyred sovereign, as priest and comforter, is emisently the one to consist an examination like this, which touches matters of conscience. We leave it in his hands."

Abbe Edgeworth, fine and sweet of presence, stood by the king, facing Beilenger and the idiot. That poor creature, a stoniaris dinais mentally at the countiers, stretching his cracked lips over darkened fangs.

"You are admitted here, Bellenger," said the priest. "to answer his Majesty" questions in the presence of witnesses."

"I thank his Majesty," said Bellenger. The abbe began as if the idiot attracted his notice for the first time.

"Who is the unfortunate child you hold with your right hand."

"What! Take care what you say! How so you know that the dasphin of France is yet among the living?"
Bellenger's countenance changed and he took his hand off his hip and let it hang down.

"I was following and watching this dangerous pretender, monsieur the abbe."

"Did you leave America when he did?"

"The evening before, monsieur. And we outstated him."

"Did you leave Paris when he did?"
"Three days later, monsieur. But we passed him while he rested."
"Why do you call such an insignificant person a dangerous pretender?"

"He is not insignificant, monsieur, as you will say, when you hear what he did in Paris."

in Paria."

"He was thrown into the prison of Ste. Pelagie, you told me."

"But he escaped by choking a sacristan so that the poor man will long bear the marks on his throat. And the first thing I knew he was high in favor with the Marquis du Plessy, and Bonaparte spoke to him, and the police laughed at complaints lodged against him."

"Who ledged complaints against him."

"I did, monsieur."

"I did, monsieur."

"How did the Marquis du Plessy obtain possession of the queen's jewels?"
"That I do not know."
"But the jewels are the lawful property of Madame d'Angouleme. He must have known they would be seized."
"I thought it necessary to bring my evidence against him, monsieur."
"There was little danger of his imposing himself upon the court. Yet you are rather to be commended than censured. Bellenger. Did this pretender know you were in Paris?"
"He saw me there."
"Many times?"

"At least fwice, monsieur the abbe,"
"Did he avoid you?"
"I avoided him. I took pains to keep him from knewing how I watched him."
"You say he flaunted. When he left Paris for Mittau was the fact generally reported?"
"No womaters."

"You learned it yourself?"
"Yes, monsieur,"
"But he must have known you would pursue him."

"He left with great secrecy, monaieur the abbe. It was given out that he was merely going to the country."

"Dead men don't follow, monsieur the abbe. The Marquis du Piessy had a duei on his hands, and was killed the day after this Lazarre left Paris."

Of all Bellenger's absurd fabrications this story was the most ridiculous. I laughed again. Madame d'Angouleme took her hands from her face and our eyes met one instant, but the idiot winted like a dog. She shuddered and covered her sight.

The priest turned from Bellinger to me with a fair-minded expression, and inquired:

"What have you to say?"

"I think not, monsieur the abbe. But I heard a Frenchman tell him he was like the martyred king, and since that hour he has presumed to consider himself the dauphin."

"Who was this Frenchman?"

"The Duke of Orleans, Louis Philippe de Bourbon, monsieur the abbe."

There was an expressive movement among the courtiers.

"Was Louis Philipse has been admining of been—the vibration."

"The poor prince, you say?"

"We never had a fitting allowance, monsieur," Bellengers declared aggressively. "Yet with little or no means I tried to bring this pretender to justice and defend his Majesty's throne."

"Pensioners are not often so outspoken in their dissatisfaction," remarked the priest.

"The stuff was not oftensive and I was hungry. He brought another bowful for himself, and we ate as we had often done in the woods. The fire shone on his hald pate and gave out the liquid lights of his fawn eyes.

"I have made a fool of myself in Mittau, Skenedonk."

"Why do you want to go back?"
"Because I am not going to be thrown out of the palace without a hearing." "What is the use?" said Skenedonk. "The old fat chief will not let you stay. He doesn't want to hear you talk. He wants to be king himself."

"Did you see me sprawling on the floor like the idiot?" "Not like the idiot. Your face was 'Did you see the duchess?"

"Tell me all you saw."
"When you went in to hold council, I watched, and saw a priest and Bellenger and the boy that God had touched, all go in after you. So I knew the council would be bad for you, Lazarre, and I stood by the door with my knife in my hand. When the talk had gone on awhile I heard something like the dropping of a buck on the ground, and sprang in; and the men drew their swords and the women screamed. The priest pointed at and the men drew their swords and the women screamed. The priest pointed at you and said, "God has smitten the pretender." Then they all went out of the room except the priest, and we opened your collar. I told him you had fallen like that before, and the stroke passed off in sleep. "But, Skenedonk, didn't my sister—the lady I led by the hand, you remember—speak to me again, or look at me, or try to covive me?"

"No. She went away with the women carrying her."

"You are here. Get some men to fight, and we will go back."

"What a stroke—to lose my senses at the moment. I needed them most!"

"You kept your smalp."

"And not much else. No! If you refuse to follow me, and wait here at this pogthause, I am going back to Mittau!"

"I so where you go," said skenedonk.
"But hest go to sleep now."

This I was not able to do until long tossink on the thorns of chastrin wore me out. I was ashamed like a predigat, baffled, and burt to the bruising of my soul. A young man's chastened confidence in himself is hard to bear, but the loss of what was given as a heritage at birth is an injustice not to be endured.

The throne of France was never my goal, to be reached through blood and revolution. Perhaps the democratic notions in my father's breast have found wider scope in mine. I wanted to influence men, and felt even at that time that I could do it; but being kins was less to my mind than being acknowledged dauphin, and brother, and bamed with my real name.

I took my fails in my hands and awors to first recognition, it I kattered a lifetime as Mitlau.
