Bhe sat down on the window seat and spread out a crumoled newspaper. From ins surjety column there stared up at her the words which seemed to change for her the face of the world. "At an informal dinner given at their mome on 268 South Jersey boulevard last night, Mr. and Mrs. Julian C. Danley an-nounced the engagement of their daugh-ter Grace to Mr. L. S. Kerton, of 22 Langley avenue. The wedding is to take place in September." "It must-it must be the Luther Kerton that is his address on Langley avenue." He had been a classmate of her brothers, and when Margaret came to argaret Semeron hung the sign "En-ed" on her door, and then locked it is the inside. The inside. The stood removing her hat, she leed out the window. The girls were king about the college campus arm (her bright is chatting and laughing in the bright is she stood removing her hat, she leed out the window. was making her stately way about the room. Something in her cold, self-satis-fied elegance depressed Margaret with a sense of her own loneliness. Still the music and hum of voices "wirged about her. "When the crowd clears away a little from the door I will go upstairs," she decided, again conscious of a feeling of irembling faintness. "I guess it would have been better if I had gone down to dinner. She was leaning wearily against the mantel when she saw, with a feeling of desperation, that Luther Kerton was oming toward her. There was no chance for escape. "It's so close and crowded in here, let's "It's so close and crowded in here, let's go out on the campus, Miss Semeron." Margaret's brown eyes pleaded protest-ation. What should she say? How should ation. What should should she say it?

should she say it? But Kerton was not walting for any-thing to be said. Even when outside, Margaret could not speak; that firm hand on her arm seemed to dominate her, and they crossed the grounds in silence. "Oh, why does he make things so hard?" she wondered bitterly. Other couples were strolling about the moonlit campus, and the soft strains of a waitz floated out to them. They sat lown on a bench. Margaret murmured something about the large number of guests, in a pitcou attempt to steer the conversation into safe channels, though she knew he had not come out there to talk about the reception.

"I must congratulate him on his engagement-oh, how shall I do it naturgagement-oh, how shall I do it natur-ally."" At that moment she was startled by Kerton's volce: "You know the old may-ing that every wedding in the family brings another soon? I trust that may come true in my case, Margaret. I re-ceived a promotion in business today which will make it possible for me to support a wife decently. Honor forbade me speaking to you before of my love, but now--" but now-There is every reason in the world why you should not speak of love to me now. Mr. Kerton. If you have no respect for me, surely you have for Miss Danley." Her moment of weakness wanter. Her moment of weakness was over now, and in its place was outraged pride -the Semeron pride! For a moment he stared at her in blank amazement, and then a light broke over his face. "Why, it is my brother Lawrence who is engaged to Grace Danley. His ini-tials are the same as mine. Does that capital are the same as mine. Does that explain why you have avoided me all the evening and would not wear my roses? You supposed all the time I was engaged? 'O sweet, pale Margaret. O rare, pale Margaret.' No wonder you thought 1 ways end."

This time she did not resist his arms. (Copyright, 1915.)

BEWARE OF YOUR WASH RAG IF YOU VALUE LIFE, HEALTH AND HAPPINESS

Germs Regard It With Great Favor and Often Congregate There and Plan Campaigns of Destruction

If you saw a boa constrictor coming in your front door, you would probably get a gun and kill it. Yet you let the family washrag hang unmolested in the bath-room although one is just as dangerous as the other. In fact, the rag is more so, because its enmity is hidden under a cloak of presumed innocence. There still are some persons who regard the washrag as a harmless friend, sithough the little cloth which we have always grasped with a friendly hand is a spineless murderer.

If one desired to land a prize for col-lecting germs, they couldn't get anything better than a washrag.

Even though the bathroom glistens with cleanliness, health experts say the wash-cloth will carry on its campaign of destruction unless carefully "watched and washed." If it hangs near the towel, the danger increases, for there is a ready interchange of bacteria. For instance, if the clothe accidentally touch, exchange tickets are thus issued to the germs, and those who are tired of the atmosphere and scenery of the washrag can take a trip to every nook and corner of the towel. If it is dotted with little soap spots here and there the visiting germs are sure of a warm welcome, for they are bound to meet another bunch of suburban germs who wax fat and happy on any kind of dormant soap. As even germs believe in reciprocity, those of the towel who want to go alumming can make the rounds of the evil places on the wash rag. They will find especial interest in the swamps and lit-tle stagnant lakes which were left to se by throwing it over a radiator linger by the last victim who forgot to wring the rag dry. Most persons are in a hurry all the time. At least, they imagine they are, even when they're not. So, who has time to rinse a washrag and wring it out, ther douse it in hot water and "let it dry in the sun?" But this is what you have to do if you want to prevent a con-vention of germs. Suppose there isn't any sun to dry the rag in. You cannot com-promise by throwing it over a radiator
