TY COBB AND GROVER ALEXANDER RATED AS THE GAME'S BEST IN 1915

Detroit Run-getter and Philly Run-crusher Regarded by Expert as Two Most Valuable Players. One Chance for Big Upset

We have one chance left in the pennant throng,

To wear once more the oldtime crown;

come. Against this pale green dream of empire both stragglers are hanging on. In making any flag computations one might remember that seven years ago on this day the Giants were even nearer the flag than the Phillies were. They were regarded as sure winners. But with the old banner flapping just a rod or two on beyond, the Giants proceeded to lose a batch of sames to the Reds and Phillies, then regarded as the softest picking in the land. They dropped three in a row to the Phillies and four out of five to the Reds.

WHAT THE PHILS MUST DO

Pat Moran's flying Phillies have 16 more games to play. Boston and Brooklyn have 15 games to play. One of Boston's games is with St. Louis and may not be played off.

If the Phillies win II and lose 5 they will have a percentage of 584, and Boston and Brooklyn will have to win all their games to tie.

If the Phillies win 10 and lose 6 they will have a percentage of 578, and Boston and Brooklyn will have to win 14 out of 15 to tie.

If the Phillies win 9 and lose 7 they will have a percentage of 571, and Boston and Brooklyn will have to win all of 15 to tie.

If the Phillies split even on 16 games they will have a percentage of 565, and Boston and Brooklyn will have to win 11 out of 15 to tie.

If the Phillies split even on 16 games they will have a percentage of 565, and Boston and Brooklyn will have to win 12 out of 15 to tie.

Eight of the Phillies' remaining 16 games are with Boston and Brooklyn.

The above figures are based an the completed schedules of each of the three teams, as no provision can be made for games lost through pesipmement.

The System

When C. J. Caesar won the pennant
A good two thousand years ago,
When he become the leading tenant
With first place pitched along the Po,
He did not fight umpires' decisions
When he was cleaning up in Gaul,
He let the rest howl their derisions
While he played ball.

When Pot Moran took up the Phillies,

Or when the Phillies took up Pat,
They swore that he'd soon have the willies,
Or that his dream would soon fall flat.
But where Pat might have been the mobber

Of many umpires, short and tall, e let the others how! out "Robber!" While he played ball.

So, reader of these idle verses, Engaged in whatsoever game, Let others roar their maudiin curses At Fate or Luck within the frame; Let others rave at breaks infernal Or out of umpires take a fall, r pile up alibies eternal— While you play ball.

Phantom Auto Winners

From the first time in many seasons there will be no automobiles effered to the pair of most valuable ball players in the American and National Leagues.

That custom ended with the 1814 campaign, when Johnnie Evers and Eddie Collins were presented with cars for having produced a greater amount of allaround efficiency than any other entries in the big show. But while the autodispensing has been abandoned, there is still a bit of interest about in speculating as to what two men would have drawn the prizes for the current year.

The Two Leaders

Every able-bodied citizen in the land is entitled to his or her opinion if he or entitled to his or her opinion if he or she cares to launch one.

Using this as a basis to start something, our pick for 1915 would be a Mr. Cobb for the American League and a Mr. Alexander for the National.

Cobb has been far and away the most valuable ball player in the land this Reason, just as he was in 1911, when he won the auto by 17 jumps. He has been one of the leading factors in keeping his club around the top, in the course of which proceeding he has led both leagues in hits, runs and stolen busse—the three main departments of attack. departments of attack.

Alexander is something more than a grand pitcher. He is as fine a fellow and as clean a sportsman as the game has ever known. He has been willing to give his best in or out of turn, and his best has been sufficient to win over a third of the Phillies' victories. Starting on September 29, the Phillies must the Braves in four games at Boston, while Brooklyn is meeting the reeling Giants, who by that date will be utterly devoid of any further ambition.

At the end of this meeting the Phillies face the Dedgers in three games, while the Braves are tangled up in four games with the Giants. So both the Braves and Dodgers at the finish have a four-game affair with the Giants, while the last seven Philly games are against Braves and Dodgers.
