THE FEET IN PLAYING GOLF; JUST HOW TO MANAGE 'EM

Expert Explains Exact Position of Body and Feet in Making Shot Most Effective-Braid's Style of Addressing Ball

By JOHN ALBERT SCOTT

To assume the position shown, place ward of the angle of inclination of the lines as in the photograph, place the feet in the position shown, standing perfectly straight, with the weight equally disposed on the feet. Place the club head back of the ball, with the face at right angles

James Braid Addressing the Ball to the line of play, bending from the body (this will prevent stiffness of the neck and assist in keeping the head still during the swing), relax the knees slightly, but do not stoop or crouch. The weight is not allowed to go forward onto the forepart of the feet, but is kept evenly on them.

The arms are not held stiffly, but slightly relaxed at the elbows; no stiffness or restraint must be felt in any part of the body; all must be supple and ready to respond to every motion made in swing-

Do not try to get the weight onto the right foot or the left. Let them carry the weight as it will naturally adjust itself. You will then find yourself in the position illustrated, with the right shoulder lower than the left, due to the right nand being lower on the shaft than the left, just so much and no more. There will be no effort to get the right shoulder down, nor will there be any crouching. Everything will be natural and easy, as is every part of the golf stroke, as I have analyzed it. It is the very naturalness of the way these men approach the matter which gives them their ability to apply power to the stroke and do everything in its natural order, without conscious effort-automatically, so far as the body is con-The hands will be slightly to the left of the centre of the body, to allow the face of the club to be held at right angles to the line of play.

There is sound reason, in fact two principal reasons, for placing the feet in this position and not square to the line across the feet, with both toes touching it and with the ball midway between.

First, it minimizes the necessary de-parture of the club head from the line of flight in going back and around the body, but more especially, it induces, in fact starts, the "body twist" without which very little power can be put into the stroke. All the great players insist on this twist of the body, lay great stress on it, and say the player "must do it." (Copyright, by John Albert Scott.)

BOXER CROUSE VICTOR OVER FIGHTER GRANDE

Mealy Whips Healy in Best Bout on Olympia Program. O'Brien Shows Finely

That a clever fisticuman has the edge on a pugilist who depends on his punch again was demonstrated when handsome Bucko Crouse, of Pittsburgh, displayed his better ability in the ring in combat with Charley Grande in the final at the Olympia A. A. last night. At the conclusion of six sizzling sessions the lead accumulated by the Smoketown scrapper was in evidence with the least doubt.

Boxer Crouse left jabbed and left hooked Fighter Grande with beautiful precision from the opening gong until the finish of the set-to. His short punches beat Grande's roundhouse wallops inces-santly. However, Vallejo Charley's aggressiveness could not be denied and he scored some corking punches to the body. Grande weighed 179 pounds, while his Pittsburgh foe tipped the beam nine pounds less. Sammy Trinckle, 153, and K. O. Lough-lin. 150, aggravated the spectators with one of the most farcical frays seen here for some time, with the former a winner by a slight margin. No real action was displayed until the final frame, when Trinckle got busy and opened a cut over Loughlin's left eye. Then, when the crowd saw blood, they stopped hooting and booing and applauded. The best battle of the night-a real battle, too-was between Johnny Mealy, 126, and Patsy Healy, 130. Mealy was a winner because of his ability to connect with and take affair from the start. Young Jack O'Brien, 145, gave a corking exhibition of boxing when he put up one of the best fights of his career in this city by walloping the everlasting day-lights out of Johnny Duffy, 147. O'Brien worked like a well-olled machine, jabbing, hooking and right-crossing like a
