BROOKLYN YOUTH FULLBACK

ON CORNELL'S ELEVEN Mike Kleinert Almost Certain to Get

Place on Varsity TTHACA, N. Y., Sept. 22.—The Cornell football practice developed into the hardest acrimmage of the year yesterday, when the varsity scored four touchdowns, holding the scrubs scoreless. Barrett and Collins made long runs, and their ability to pick holes in the scrub line was marvelous.

Mike Kleinert, the husky fullback from Brooklyn, joined the varsity, replacing another. He shows up strong and is virtually assured of a berth at fullback.

A CINCH IN PITCHING; ARGUMENTS PRO AND CON, WITH THE 70'S VS. 1915

Alexander Compares Box Work of Yesteryear With Task of Today-Would Dread Restrictions of Old Days, but Would Dearly Love to Have Nine Balls debate and have read everything possible relating to the subject.

It is true that I do not know under what conditions such pitchers as the late A. G. Spaldance ing and others who were wisards before I was born worked. The rules were different then, and the game was certainly not so scientific as it now is. However, I like to read about and discuss pitching then and now.

Invariably, when a pitcher of today talks about the "greats" of 18%, the year the National League was started, he remarks: Yes, but the hurler only stood 45 feet from the centre of the home plate in those days and the rule was three strikes and nine balls. Give me nine chances to work on a batsman before he walks and cut 15 feet off the distance, and I'll turn in about ten no-hit games in a season."

If I had grood control of my "fast one."

in a season,"

If I had good control of my "fast one," I don't believe many batsmen would bit me if I stood only 45 feet away from the plate, instead of 60. And, if I had the ability to put the ball where I wanted it to go, the batsman would not get many good ones to swing at if I could give him nine wide pitches before he got a

However, I know and appreciate the fact that the twirlers of the seventies could not heave a ball overhanded, or from the shoulder, as we do today. Then, they had to shoot it up somewhat after the fashion of the bowler in cricket. The arm was supposed to swing about perpenarm was supposed to swing about perpen-dicular at the side of the body, and if in swinging it forward the pitcher got it above his hip, it was an illegal delivery. I imagine that our present-day pitchers would want to have the distance shortened more than 15 feet if they had to "bowl" the ball to the plate all the time.

I have been told that the question of talls and strikes did not enter into the game so much in the early days of the national pastime. Then a batsman went up to the plate expecting to hit the "apple" somewhere, and the umpiring was not so competent or strict as it now is. In the eightles, the box was moved back to 50 feet from the home plate, and the pitched could employ any style he desired —that is, he could pitch overhanded or underhanded. The box also was increased in size, I believe, and at one time the box was so large that a man could take a hop, step and jump in delivering the hell. If a man with Walter Johnson's speed would begin to do a clog dance in the box, and get a running start to shoot the pill at a battsman, I guess the man with the stick would duck on general principles. He'd figure that was the best way to prolong his visit on Mother Earth.

Now, while I am sure that the men who pitched in the eighties might have enjoyed an advantage over the hurlers of this century, it does not follow that they did. The curve ball was in its infancy then, and the flinger depended largely upon a straight one with plenty of speed. The vast assortment of "puzzlers" that the average pitcher uses today were en-tirely unknown then. For that reason it

Major league ball players today always are greatly interested when they hear an argument about the respective merits of the stars of the 70's and 80's and those of today. Personally, I have always been interested in the pitching end of the debate and have read everything possible relating to the subject.

It is true that I do not know under what conditions such pitchers as the late A. G. Spaidance wisards before I was born worked. On the whole, it is a good thing that the pitching requirements have been changed more than any others. The man who delivers the ball and the man who swings a bat are the important cogs in the battle. The success of the national pastime, from a spectator's standpoint, depend upon balancing the twirler and batsman as nearly as possible.

Frequently you will hear some fan say.

Frequently you will hear some fan say.

"Gee, but I like to see a lot of batting."
They tell me many spectators come to the Phillies' park in the hope that they will see Cravath, Luderus or one of our players hit a home run. I like to will see Cravath, Luderus or one of our players hit a home run. I like to see one of my pals hit a home run or drive the ball all over the lot, too.

But did you ever stop to consider that a pitcher has feelings. Hitting may be very fine to look work.

a pitcher has feelings. Hitting may be very fine to look upon, but since my wages are paid me because I try to prevent hitting, I must do it reasonably well, or I don't get my pay checks from the Philadelphia management. I would much rather hear the fans go wild over strike-outs and shut-out games.

When Mr. Spaulding was the famous pitcher for the Boston and Chicago clubs, one twirler was expected to do about all the work. But they did not play every day for six months then and a man could conserve his strength better than he an.

The average twirler nowadays works every fourth day, and that is about all his arm will stand. I do not believe it is because the young men of today are not as hardy as they were in the 70s, but believe it is because of the advancement of the game and the fact that the big league schedule calls for 154 games. Understand, in what I have said, I de not want to be placed in the position of taking a thing away from the pitchers of the early days. I simply have attempted, from what I have heard and read, to give you my impressions of pitching then as compared with pitching today.

If I am living 20 years from this day, I magine the twiriers of that period will be working under entirely different con-ditions and will be wondering whether I did not have a cinch compared to them. But they should remember, as I have tried to do, that after all it is a struggle be-tween batsman and twirler, and the advancement of the game along scientific lines makes necessary the alterations in che rules. Pitching, according to my way of look-ing at it, is a man's job no matter what rules are in force. The fellow with the bat is dangerous under almost any condi-

Champion Forced to Defensive by Clever Westerner

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 22.—Johnny Kilbane, featherweight champion, holds his title today by a narrow margin. The best he could get was a draw in last night's battle here with Ritchie. The Milwaukee lightweight, who trained down to 128 pounds to meet the Ohloan, pulled the unexpected and forced Kilbane to the defensive several times.
