YEAR'S RAPID PROGRESS

Two Counties Added to "Dry List." Membership Increased

YORK, Pa., Oct. 1.-That woman suffrage is the twin sister of local option and is needed in this State to ald in making it "dry" was declared at the dist annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Pennsylwants, which opened in the First Methedist Episcopal Church here today, with mearly every county represented. More than 500 women attended. The suffrage question was thrashed out during a franchise demonstration conducted by Mrs. Elizabeth P. Griest, of Lancaster, an active member of the Pennsylvania Wom-Suffrage Association.

The convention began with a song service in charge of Mrs. A. K. Brodie, Car-bendale, the subject being "The Power of a Spirit-filled Life."

Following the report of the central committee, Mrs. Ella M. George, Beaver Falls, made a report, tracing the growth of the work during the 41 years' history of the organization. Tloga and Wyoming, she said, had been added to the list of "dry" counties during the last year.

"One of the most significant events of the Atlantic City conference was the pledge of co-operation from the Catholic League of America with the Anti-Saloon League of America. Heretofore, the Catholic Church has confined its activities in temperance reform largely to total abstinence societies, and its argument has been for "moral sussion." Now the Cathohibition League sees the necessity of legislative activity, and will prove a powerful ally to the great army of citizens that is fighting for the overthrow of the liquor traffic through legislative

Month Starts With Rain as Forecaster Predicted

Rain fell today, fulfilling the weather man's prediction. It is expected to conman's prediction. It is expected to con-tinue all day. The rainfall is steady, up to noon the precipitation having regis-tered .15 inch.

The rain today is part of the tropical storm that was so turbulent down around the Guif of Mexico yesterday. It is just the tail end and hasn't any of the violence that was experienced in the vicinity of New Orleans.

Weather conditions are quite different m those of yesterday and the few preceding days, when it was so clear and crisp. There is every excuse for the tired business man today, and indifference toward one's work may well be engendered by the stuffness of the atmosphere. Dampness seemed to be the order of the

TURKS BIND CAPTIVES, PILE THEM LIKE WOOD, BURN THEM TO DEATH

Sea Captain Says Alexandria Merchant Told Him of Barbarism Committed in Dardanelles

SHORT OF AMMUNITION

The Turks are making great human bonfires of their prisoners of war, destroying them by flames because ammunition is too scarce and feeding them is profittens.

That is the story brought to this city by Captain Gideon S. Jeffries, of 104 North 53d street. Captain Jeffries was in command of the Gargoyle, a tank steamer belonging to the Vacuum Oil Company, when the vessel made three eventful voyages to Alexandria.

The source of his information, the captain said, was a business man in Alexandria. It was this merchant, whose identity he refused to reveal, who told him of the cruelties practiced by the Turkish soldiers in the Dardanelles. The Alexandrian himself had witnessed the atrocities while on a business journey to the scene of the slaughter.

When enemies of the Turks are shot they are subjected to further injury, ac-cording to the captain. They are left on the battlefield, either to be rescued by comrades or to die. Wounded enemy don't cost anything.

But if a soldier is captured he is doomed to death by fire. The prisoners are marshaled into line and marched to the scene of the execution. They are bound, hand and foot, and their bodies are then soaked in oil. The men are then piled upon each other and when columns of prisoners have been built the torch is applied. As the living fuel writhes in its distress, sometimes rolling over each distress, sometimes rolling over each other, new "kindling" is added to the bonfire, and when every prisoner has been reduced to askes the Turks go on their way.

SHIP RECALLED.

Captain Jeffries learned of this condition on one of the three voyages which he made to Alexandria since the beginning of the European war. Shortly after the declaration of hostilities the German oil steamer Purcoil was on its way to Hamburg when it was ordered to return to Marcus Hook. Subsequently the tank-er-was admitted to American registry and the name was changed from Pureoil to

On December 10 the Gargovie sailed for Alexandria. Arriving at Gibraltar, she was stopped by the British authorities, and after a thorough examination was permitted to proceed to Egypt. The ves-sel then returned to America. On March 1 another voyage was made, and the Gargoyle was again stopped at Gibraitar, carrying, as on the previous trip, a cargo of oil valued at $500,000. On May II the of oil valued at $800,000. On May il the third journey was undertaken.

But this time the difficulties of Captain Jeffries did not end at Gibraltar. The tanker was advised to mend her course by the commander of a French cruiser, and when the advice was not accepted, the ship was interned in St. Paul's Bay, off the Island of Maita, for three weeks. off the Island of Maita, for three weeks.
During the term of infernment Captain Jeffries was subjected to most rigorous scrutiny. Once, when he attempted to leave the boat, he was threatened with arrest. His movements were carefully observed and no privileges were allowed unless a thorough investigation had first been completed.

PERMITTED TO SAIL

Finally the Gargoyle was permitted to sail for Alexandria. The French naval lieutenant who had ordered the vessel interned, however, required Captain Jeffries to man his ship with five French sailors and a French officer. The purpose of that prevision was to insure the return of the Gargoyle to Malta.

It was wanted there again because of impending prize-court proceedings. The ship, although registered by the govern-ment of the United States, had been a German vessel. In consequence, under certain interpretations of international law, the captain might be required to answer important questions of the English or French authorities.

Police Court Chronicle

The jubilation of Pat Moran over the success of the Phillies kept things lively in Kensington. And the fact that it was his namesake who steered the team to the coveted goal added to the joy of Kensington's Pat. Years ago he was somewhat of a ball player himself, and it is generally agreed in that neighborhood that Pat used to play on the old Metropolitan team of New York.

To prove that he still retained some of his old-time speed as a pitcher, Pat "warmed up" with tomatoes and potatoes which he found in baskets in front of a grocery near 2d and Poplar streets. His aim was true and he clipped the hats off was his namesake who steered the team aim was true and he clipped the nats off several doubting spectators, who de-clared that he was "all in" as a pitcher. In one or two cases Pat pitched a little low and the speeding vegetables left their marks on the faces of the human targets.

They charged upon Pat, but he held his ground and proved that he was handy with his fists, although somewhat unsteady on his feet. Sergeant Keefe ended hostilities and brought Pat to the Front and Master streets station. Magistrate Scott was not in the least severe. The fact that the Phillies won the pennant and were headed by Pat's namesake was sufficient cause for his joyous mood. Pat told a story which made a hit with the Judge, and he allowed him a home run.

One of the notable cases is that of J. Robinson Duff, who alout a year ago scraped together $500 with which he bought 13 shares of Electric Hoat. Today, Mr. Puff is worth sucre than $50,000 and has an office of his own.

Women as well as men have benefited by the rise in stocks. School teachers have been able to turn from the channels of education to those of idleness and investigation to those of idleness and investigati
