What Milady Wears

That fashion favors the use of fur of all kinds as trimming on suits, gowns and hats cannot be gainsaid, the one exception seeming to be white fox, which has evidently taken its place among the dear departed except for evening wear. The use of beaver, squirrel or moleskin on the trotteur is exceedingly smart, the short full skirt when bordered with fur being given a particularly graceful swing. While shopping recently Miss Eugenia Kelso Cassatt were one of the good-looking sport suits so much in vogue just at present. It was of a rich brown shade with a collar of beaver, and her hat, which was one of the plush hats in Puritan shape, had as sole trimming a huge buckle of beaver fur placed directly at the front of the high crown.

Mrs. Benjamin Chew, who is always stunning, looks particularly well in a trotteur of navy blue broadcloth, with which she wears a tiny toque of navy blue velvet devoid of trimming. Her furs are of silver fox. Mrs. Gardner furs are of silver fox. Mrs. Gardner Cassatt is another matron who prefers navy blue this autumn. With a perfectly simple tailored suit of blue cloth she wears a close-fitting hat of pheasant feathers and furs of dyed blue fox. One of the smartest long coats seen this season is being worn by Miss Charlotte Harding Brown. It is of covert cloth, cut on princess lines, with a very slight flare, and at the waistline is a cloth, cut on princess lines, with a very slight flare, and at the waistline is a three-inch band of the cloth to simulate a belt. Worn with a one-piece frock of navy blue serge and taffeta and a large flat taffeta hat to match, the effect is very good. Miss Ethel Shields looks well in a sports suit of sand-colored cloth, with which she wears dyed blue fox furs and a small close-fitting turban of navy blue velvet and taffeta.
