with Caruso, Scottl and Alda as drawing cards, the opera last night was a marvelous success. Society with a big S was there en masse and listened to every note of their beloved Caruso's voice with joy, though his intense sobs and grunts caused some unholy mirth, especially from the Opera Club, for which, by the way, the audience in general should be thankful, for when the ignorant, who are pleased with one special note, start in to appland before the finish, the Club descends upon them with a mighty hiss, and order is once more restored?

As usual, after the performance the Ritz-Cariton supper-dance was the attraction, and a number of suppers were given there. The Stoesburys entertained a party, including the Tony Cromwells. Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brooks, Jr., the Craig Biddles, Bobby Cassatts, Gardner Cassatts, Tom Ridgways, Mrs. John Kearsley Mitchell, 3d, Jim Cromwell and Dr. Charles Harte. The W. Frazier Harrisons also entertained, their guests including Mr. and Mrs. George McFadden, Jr., and Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel Paul. Mrs. B. Franklin Clyde had as guests Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wright and Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Barklis. Barclay McFadden had among his guests Miss Priscilla Bohlen and Miss Eugenia Cassatt. The Ferrulis had invited Caruso to attend the supper-dance, but the singer was so fatigued he returned at once to New York. Mrs. Thomas Glover had as guests Mr. and Mrs. Lentz and the Walter Blabons. As usual, after the performance the Hope and Tony Cromwell were at the Stokes-Coxe reception in the afternoon, which was a perfect jam of people, and as for the presents I never saw such an array. There was not a square inch between them on the tables, which were arranged around the rooms, and they arranged around the rooms, and they were all beautiful, not a single eyesore.

The people who wanted to get in early had a time out there, for the 2:32 train was delayed until after 3:15, but they finally came in time to go to Valentine Mitchell's first at home.

Every one is much excited over the words uttered the other day at a tea by the pretty sister of one of our debutantes, who is creating quite a furore in the hearts who is creating quite a furore in the hearts of her many admirers. Pretty sister has a trio of such ardent admirers that I am wondering which one she will choose. as she has evidently decided not to wait much longer to take her choice, for she will not let little sister beat her to it, so to speak, so she says she will announce It first. It must be awfully hard to deelde in a hurry, don't you think?

A goodly number of Philadelphia girls and men left for Baltimore last week to attend the dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Hewes for Priscilla Dawson and Nancy Dicett, two of the most attractive debs in Baltimore this winter. Beth Scott was the guest of the Dawsons while Anne Spencer stayed over the week-end with her old school chum, Fanny Stewart Mc-Lean, Gertrude Heckscher is visitins Mrs. C. Morton Stewart at her lovely old country home in the Green Spring Valcountry home in the Green Spring Val-ley. She and her mother are expected back today, which doubtless will cheer the drooping spirits of a number of young suitors. Other Philadelphians who attended the dance were Alva Sergeant, Brooke Edwards, John Mears, Aplin Sparks, Herkley Reed, Hal Adams, and a young man who halls from Boston, but is making his home here this year, though most of his spare moments are spent in the city on the Chesapeake. I am told that the lady of his heart really lives there so that is surely the cause, very best reason for his many visits.

Another question in my mind is just when a certain little brown-haired, brown-eyed lady who came out last scason will tell us of her happy and, as she fondly believes, well-guarded secret. We have had our suspicions for some time and as to the mother of the man in the case she is brimming over with delight about it all, for she wants this very little person for a daughter-in-law more than person for a daughter-in-law more than anything else in the world just now. The theme of the fantasy is weird and mystic, and much of the music carries out the effect of dramatic allegory.
A slight plot runs like a silver thread through the production, and acts as connecting link for the many spectacular dances and songs with which the entire play is replete.

"Joy," ethereal and elusive, disliking the poor children with whom she comes in contact, incurs the anger of "Envy," who conspires with "Misfortune" to get even with "Joy" and induce her to run away with him. They wander far afield, visit the land of "Bate and Owls," and are sorely frightened. "Charity," in her quest for "Joy," is Joined by "Youth," "Beauty," "Grace" and "Galety," but their search is all in vain: "Joy" constantly cludes them, though they seek her in moving picture palaces, roof garden cafes, and dance halls. Her flight is a long one, occupying all the years of her life from the time she is a wee child at school until she reaches woman's estate. Much to the she reaches woman's estate.
