EXTRAVAGANT COSTUMES FOR THE NEW YEAR PARADE OF MUMMERS
of silk, satin, gilt and tinsel may be found at the establishment of Mrs. E. E. Murphy, costumer, on East Bayview avenue, who is making much of the brilliant garb for the Shooters' parade. The affair is being most lavishly advertised and gives promise of being the most splendid that has ever taken place in this city.

GREEK CAVALRY WITHDRAWS FROM SALONICA, LEAVING PORT IN ALLIES' HANDS.
The picture reveals a scene in the city that just now is the biggest storm centre of the war. Greece has withdrawn all her forces there, and even the customs are under the control of the Allies.

ONE OF THE COSTUMES TO BE WORN BY A MUMMER ON NEW YEAR'S DAY.
This elaborate and costly affair has just been made for William Chambers, member of the Klein Club, which has taken a prominent part in many parades of the past and has been the winner of many prizes.

HE WAS THE MOSBY OF MOSBY'S GUERRILLAS
Colonel John Singleton Mosby, famous Confederate cavalry leader, has just celebrated his 82d birthday in Washington. Among letters of congratulation were many from former prisoners he took. His was a feared name in the Civil War.

ENTHUSIASTIC AUSTRALIAN VOLUNTEERS MARCH 320 MILES FROM INTERIOR WHEAT BELT TO ENLIST AT SYDNEY.
There is a story connected with this picture. Thirty men of the town of Gigandra, in the interior of Australia, organized themselves into a band and decided to march to Sydney to offer their services. The movement was originated by the captain of the local rifle club, who accompanied the recruits on their journey. Along the route new recruits fell in line. At each stopping place a new band joined the original 30, and by the time the expedition reached Sydney the number had increased to several hundred. The picture shows the "Coo-see," as they were christened, after they had settled well down on their march.
