NANCY WYNNE TELLS OF THE WORK DONE AT SOUTHWARK SETTLEMENT

dersen, will be presented by the chil- of the phone. dren of the Dramatic Club of the Southwark Neighborhood House, Front and Ellsworth streets, at the Broad Street Theatre, tomorrow afternoon.

It is really remarkable, I think, what splendid work this club has done. The little members are trained by Mrs. Schelner, whose work with the Educational Dramatic League in New York te well known. In that city Miss Marburg and Mrs. August Belmont, who was the beautiful Eleanor Robson, are, I understand, much interested in the

The cast for the play tomorrow afternoon is made up from the children who come to the dramatic classes of the Neighborhood House, and the purpose of this club is to bring before the pub-He the great value of dramatic work as an educational force in the training and character development of children; for dramatic work is part of the edu-cation in the Neighborhood House, and Mrs. Adams, who is head of this settle-ment, cherishes the hope that some day they may have such a theatre as the Henry Street Settlement in New York for dramatic work is part of the eduboasts, that the children may be able to give their plays in their own environment, and not have to depend on the public theatres for their presentation; and that as interest and appreciation of this work grow community theatres may be established throughont the city. The dancing done by these little children is very remarkable, by the way, and this also is a feature of the work done by the Dramatic Club. The children are wonderfully graceful, and their dancing is deli litful to behold.

At the Benedicks' Ball last night the older married set had its innings, and it was surely time, for I never saw anything like the way everything is given over to the debutantes all Childs. through the season, and some few dances for the younger married set. Of course, there were same debs and many of the younger married set there last night, but the older ones rather predominated, and they had a very good time, too. Last year we had no Benedicks' Ball, because of the war and the many demands on the various members of the committee for other things, so it was decided to put it off. just as only one Assembly was given last year, with a subscription of $5 inatend of $15, which is the regular subscription since the balls have been given at the Bellevue-Stratford. Mrs. Chariton Yarnall, Mrs. Charlemagne Tower and Mrs. Edward Lowber Welsh received the guests. There were altogether about 350, and everybody had a wenderful time.

There were 23 debutantes invited to the ball, and they were all there except Sarah Penrose, who, with the rest of the Drexel contingency, was absent owing to the death of Mrs. Brodhead. Mrs. Van Rensselaer, who was in the receiving party, withdrew,

One of the most brilliant houses of the season gathered together last night for the performance of Tosca at the Metropolitan Opera House Probably the unusual attendance and gowning was due to the Benedicks' ball, for many box parties afterward adjourned to Horticultural Hall, there to dance until morning. Mrs. Charlie Wright, in shimmering black velvet and tulle, occupied her accustomed place on the grand tier, and Mrs. Henry Brinton Coxe, resplendent in white satin and tulle, also was among those present, with her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. Standley Stokes. Mariana Gowen, who was one of the 23 debutantes to attend the Benedicks, made one of a party which included Mrs. Francis L Gowen and Miss Rosalie Brown Dolan. The Hopkins girls, Eleanor and Elise, were present, the former wearing a superb gown of crimson velvet, white her sister, who is undoubtedly one of the best-dressed girls in town, were a wonderful frock of pale blue and orchid satin-striped taffeta.

An amusing story reached my ears the other day, and there is a decided moral in it. These wonderful phones we have these days, with their fine service, sometimes do peculiar things, and these one-party wires do most unaccountably get mixed up in strange combinations. Two women were talking very frankly over the phone one day recently, and as time went on they began telling one spicy tale after another, until it came to a case of the more the merrier, and joke followed on joke till the wire rang with merriment. Suddenly merriment in a deeper tone entered into the conversation, and a masculine voice was heard to remark, "Well, that is the best I have heard for many a day." Audible silence ensued on the part of the two ladies, for they had not been careful of names in conversing. Suffice it to say, it was a relief when the voice again said: "Don't worry. I won't give you away, and it may please you to know I have been suffering from melancholia for three days and you have broken it all up. I could laugh for a week." This turned out all right, but just suppose they had been saying things about others they would not liked to have overheard, as it often does happen. One day last year I was walting for a number, and heard a most edifying conversation about a mix-up between two persons who were at odds on some charitable work, and the whole thing was detailed with names and circumstances which left nothing to be filled out in the imagination. I could not reelst saving an I hung up. "I am 'ertainly glad to know the truth in re-

A strange mixture, you say—great wisdom and a wonderful creative imagination.

Both qualities in one man might be considered little short of a miracle—perhaps never before have they been so combined.
