NANCY WYNNE TALKS ABOUT THE ASSEMBLY HELD LAST NIGHT

Rall Given at the Bellevue-Stratford Last Evening Was Handsomest of the Year-Various Interesting Affairs

sual splendor. I do not think I have often seen such an attractive array of patronesses, who stood in their straight row at the entrance to the ballroom, holding wonderful bouquets of flowers and courtesying gravely as each guest arrived, from timld debumante, with her half-hesitating courtesy, to the elder swalns, who bowed low with hand on heart.

Mrs. Cuyler, who headed the line of patronesses, wore a wonderful gown of urquoise blue velvet, and the others wore various combinations of white and silver and white and gold. The hall was not as crowded as last year's, but that made the dancing all the better, and the debs who were there, as well as their elders, certainly had some good dances. Eleanor Pepper and Eleanor Cuyler, I noticed, were never left idle for a moment, and Elizabeth Griffiths, who looked so sweet in a pink frock, was another who had a splendid time, as did Sarah Penrose, Mariana Gowen wore a dainty frock of white and silver, and Lisa Norris was in pale-pink chiffon and tulle. I have heard much of Dorothy Norris. of course, but as she has lived abroad so much, I really have not seen her for several years, so last night was the time for her first appearance arross my horizon, and let me assure you she is quite unlike any one I have yet seen in this old City of Brotherly Love. There is a distinctly. Continental touch to her manner and her style of conversation.

Of course the supper, and especially the terrapin, was quite the most important part of the ball, and it was funny to see how many family remions there were. Fond mammas and papas looking after their newly fledged roungsters, and one table of young married folk was especially interesting, as many of the wives in the case were of the high-brow order and generally dabble in plays or playings or Society. The husbands at this table, much to every one's amusement, started a debate as to whether it was good form to speak to one's wife in public or not. The decision was ignative in the end, i believe. At any rate, after supper. I saw each gay hus-bank seeking other fair charmers with whom to converse. As usual, Pol Roger, also Veuve Clicquot, were well in evidence during supper, but with no visible evil effect. To be sure, I saw one callow youth later who in sisted on offering a lady a glass of lemonade, the cup for which he was holding upside down and industriously trying to fill.

And, to be sure, I did meet one gentleman who confided in mine ear that "so and so has had much more champagne than I have, but he does not know it." We decided, however, to leave him in ignorance.

Although the majority may be said to have worn short frocks, still there were many gowns with trains, and quite a number of the smartest women wore longer-skirted frocks. Ruth Stokes was one of those to choose a rather longer gown, and Mary Bohlen's frock had a long lace train. Her gown was really lovely, all of white lace and

It would be quite impossible for me tell of all the lovely gowns. Little Mrs. Du Barry, who was dancing happlly with Joe, was wearing a wonderful gown of rose-red brocaded silk, which suited her fair coloring to perfection. Another recent bride who boked very charming was Angela Bodine, and Katherine Kremer Page was omingly gowned in white, with a string of pearls in her hair. Florence Hopkinson looked lovely in white and diver, and Mildred Sinkler was regal in a gown of ashes of roses. Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., and her very young husband came on from ew York, and with three other men cupied a table near the patroneses, who, by the way, supped in the Clover Room. At another table were the Tom Ridgways, Eleanor Cuyler and Billy Wayne. Altogether, it was a beauti-ful ball, and we all had a dandy time.

Edgar Scott met with sad disaster toing to the ball, when a Cadillac with no number and which afterward made a good getaway, ran into his very at car and smashed it up, so that It was impossible to go on, and Edgar had to descend to terra firma and proceed on foot to the Bellevue-Stratford.
