BASEBALL HAS BECOME VERY TOPHEAVY FINANCIALLY DURING THE LAST FEW YEARS

BASEBALL FRANCHISES NOW BRING FAR MORE CASH THAN - THEY ARE WORTH TO BUYERS

Even Pennant-winning Teams in the Recent Past Have Proved to Be Financial "White Elephants"

TRATHE grand oid game of baseball becoming top-heavy and is a thorough forganization necessary to prevent its ruin?

Ponce has been made between the warring factions, and it was freely predicted that the game would flourish again, but recent developments prove conclusively that baseball is really in a bad way. Next summer and perhaps for three or four more years the fans will enjoy a better article of ball than has been displayed in the major leagues since the war began, but veteran haseball men believe there are breakers ahead for the magnates.

Instead of bringing the grand old game back to a solid and sensible foundation they believe peace has brought about a condition of affairs which is alarming. No doubt there are many who will disagree, but the plain facts are that the men who are now buying major league franchises are throwing their money away and have but little chance of ever getting out of Toall what they put into it, much less receive an income as much as the investment of such a sum should bring.

. . . Purchasers Pay Too Much for Franchises

When a man buys a ball club at the present time what does he buy but a lot of players who are here today and elsewhere in a few years, the good will of the old owners and a scrap of paper called a franchise? In cases where the site for the ball park was included in the sale the buyers have a chance; but in the case of the new owners of the Boston Braves they have little or no chance to make enough to make the investment worth while.

We are told that the salaries of the ball players will be gradually cut until the men who draw the people to the gate and make the game possible will get about half what they are receiving today. No doubt in many instances this will prove the case, but what can the magnate who has just invested a half million of dollars or more in a franchise do if five or six of his best players band together and insist on receiving a certain amount of money before they sign?

The hot-headed individual will tell them to go to blazes, but he will be rewarded with a tail-end team. The men who are paying such fabulous sums for franchises have but one chance to realize anything from their investment and that chance is a winning ball team. Without the players this is impossible. The wonderful success of Charles Webb Murphy turned baseball upside down, and magnates who have tail-end ball teams and those buying into the game now are gambling in hopes of developing a team like the old Cubs, the Mackmen or the Giants, who have had a monopoly on pennants and world's series receipts in the last decade.

. . . Must Have Winning Teams to Pay

There can be but one pennant winner in each league, and unless the new owners of teams in the major leagues can develop a pennant-winning team within the course of five years they will be far in the hole. Like the man who dabbles with the stock market, they always believe that their luck will turn; but there are at least 10 clubs in the major leagues which are valued at twice their worth, and the owners will find it out when they try to sell five years from now.

The bankers' committee in charge of the affairs of Charles Somers, owner of the Cleveland Club, has set a price of $560,000 on the tail-end Indians; the St. Louis Browns sold for $525,000; Weeghman paid $500,000 for the Cubs without the grounds; Percy Haughton purchased the Braves for $570,000, while $1.250.000 is asked for the New York National Lengue club by its owners, who are negotiating with Harry Sinclair.

What will the buyer of these franchises receive?

At Cleveland the new owners will receive the right to operate a team, a poor bunch of ball players and the ill will of the fans of the Sixth City. The Indians had no Federal or National League opposition, yet the fans in Cleveland have turned to independent ball. Baseball men say the franchise is a bargain at that price, but facts prove otherwise. Cleveland has not made any money since 1908, being a steady loser, and there is nothing to assure new owners that the team will not be a second division aggregation for years to come. Judging by what the team has shown in the last two years this will almost surely be the case. The other American League magnates have promised to come to the aid of the new owners and strengthen the team; but did they not also promise to aid Charles Somers? When it was too late the league voted to loan Somers $100,000 to finance the team. Had the offer been made when Somers first became financially embarrassed he would still have the club.

Weeghman Received 25 Good Ball Players

Weeghman, in Chicago, received 25 players and the right to operate a club. He already had the good will of the fans, and immediately put more than half of the players on the market. In other words, the new owner of the Cubs paid $500,000 for a dozen players and the privilege of consolidating the Whales and Cubs. Weeghman will not fare as poorly as others who have franchises, if Tinker turn he should. Chicago is a great ball town for a winner, and if Weeghman has a pennant-winner or two he may be even with the game in 10 years. In buying the Braves, Percy Haughton's syndicate purchased a rattling good ball team, but one that is not worth anywhere near $570,000. The new owners will be under terrific expense in renting the wonderful new park. owned by James Gaffney, and not included in the sale. If Haughton were to sell all his players he could not possibly get more than $200,000. That leaves $370,000 as the price of the franchise, and who would pay that without the players? It is no sure thing the Braves will not go to pleces, as other great teams have. Its salary list is enormous, the expense of operating the team still greater, and without a pennant-winner Haughton and his associates are likely to be years and years before they are even with the game. Gaffney bought his franchise a couple of years ago for $187,000, so it is easy to see that he has made no mistake in selling.

W pest in the scholastic teapot occurred yesterday, when Jimmis Usilion, coach of the Central High basketball team, scored the management of the South Philadel-phia High cage team and the Supervisory Committee on Athetics for permitting a former coach of a league team to referee in the present race for the public high school basketball championship. The Central High coach said it was un-fair to his team of any other team to play against a five whose former coach acted as referee. Usilton made reference to the recent Central-South Philadelphia game, playd on the latter's floor and refereed by Mike Saxe, at one time coach of the downtowners. The game resulted in a defeat for Central by the margin of one lowed to pass unnoticed. Coach Usilton said yesterday that is has no personal grievance against gas. # IN SOCCER LEAGUE HANDICAPS GAME Disston, Bethlehem and Hi-

bernians Too Strong for American League Teams

OTHER NEWS OF SOCCER

Saturday's games in the American League clearly demonstrated the one-sidedness of that organization. The three leaders, Disston, Bethlehem and the Ubaronas set of the state leaders, Disston, Bethlehem and the Hibernians, gained remarkably easy vic-tories over Boys' Club, Victor Talking Machine Company and the Rangers, re-spectively. Just why the American League mogulas permit this situation, which has existed for several years, to remain is a question that puzzles soccer fans all over the dity, but particularly those up Ken-sington and Frankford way, where the majority of the games are played.

majority of the games are played. For the first time since the start of the season there were three American League matches played here in one day, but the total number of the spectators at all three games was less than half the number that saw the Disston-Bethlehem match on Christmas Day. Unless this condition is remedied before the close of the present season or previous to the start of the championship race next fall, it would be not at all unlikely if Bethlehem withdraws from the American League, perhaps to not at all united if Bethenen withdrawn from the American League, perhaps to join one of the New York district organi-zations. This would react on the local soccer fans, who would thereby be robbed of the opportunity of seeing the country's leading soccer eleven in action. The position of the three leaders in the American Lague is unchanged. Disston

American League is unchanged. Disston leads Bethlehem by two points and Beth-lehem leads the Hibernians by the same margin. Disston, with "Mike" Owens at inside right and goal-keeper and Pearce at centre forward, had a picnic with Vic-tor Talking Machine, winning, 5-6. Boys Club defended well against the Bethlehem attacks early in the game, but soon these attacks became irresistible and Bethlehem tailled five goals, holding Boys' Club scoreless. #### Tail-end Team Brought $525,000

In St. Louis Phil Ball and Otto Steifel purchased a tail-end team, which has been a drug on the market, for $525,000. A winner in St. Louis will prove a money-maker, and the consolidation of the Feds and Browns should give the new owners an excellent team; but it will also be years before they are even under any condition.

Then we consider the New York Giants, which is generally recognized as the most valuable franchise in the country. John T. Brush was the principal stockholder of the Giants since 1902, and it was thought that he was immensely wealthy, considering the fact that the Giants had always been top-notch team until last seaso., had taken part in the world's series of 1905, 1911, 1912, 1913 and had won the National League pennant in 1904; but when he died it was learned that he was not half so rich as had been supposed.

The reports of the New York club shows that it earned nothing last year. and that its profits have been by far smaller than is generally supposed since Therefore, why is the franchise now worth a million and a quarter with a team that finished in last place? These are just a few of the incidents which prove that the grand old game has become top-heavy, and when any business gets in that condition it is due for a fall.

. . . Murphy Started Rush into Baseball Business

As stated before, the marvelous luck of Charles Webb Murphy, who is said to have run a shoestring into a million, is responsible for the mad rush into baseball of moneyed men of other businesses. In the long history of basehall Charles Murphy is the only man who ever owned a ball team who retired from the sport a big winner until the last year, when the price of franchises took a sudden jump.

Charley Comiskey is still in baseball, so is Barney Dreyfuss, Charley Ebbetts and Mack and Shibe. Perhaps all of them have become wealthy from the game, although Mack declares he is broke and Ebbetts is known to have had financial troubles two years ago. Of all the others who have owned teams since the organization of the National League in 1876 not one has retired a blg winner.

When Jim Hart sold the Cubs eleven years ago he made a little. Like others who have sold franchises in a growing business, he sold for much more than he paid; but while in the game his losses were such that there was not much of a balance. Soden and Conant, the old owners of the famous Boston team, cleared some money while in the game, but not what such a wonderful organization should have made, and it is the same with others.
