Police patrol wagon horse, who fell dead in last gallant effort.

A movement to save the carcass of Bill, patrol horse hero, from a "quicklime burial" has been started by policemen at the Trenton avenue and Dauphin street station, where the old horse was in service for more than 25 years.

Bill died yeatering as the result of an attempt to save the life of little Francis Mellon, 205 Letterly street, who was terribly scaled when he pulled a feather of boiling water from a steve in his home. Bill was one of the two horses that drew the patrol wagon in a record run to the Episcopal Hospital, and he fell dead in his harness just as the wagon con-taining the Melion boy reached the dismanry.

The harse had a strong hold on the affections of every policeman at the Trenton avenue and Dauphin street sta-tion. He was also loved by school chil-dren and residents near the station. These staunch friends of Bill were indignant today, when they learned that the carries of the faithful old animal was cutting his throat with the tin fastener of likely to be given a "quicklime burial" or sold to a rendering plant for the manu-facture of fats and soaps. It was determined that money enough should be collected to give Bill a hurial befitting his long years of faithful serv-ice. Pupils of the Northeast High School for Girls and members of a Boy Scout baud in the neighborhood all begged for the provilege of contributing their mite to purchase an appropriate burfal spot for old Will.
