

ILLUSTRATED Evening Ledger

TUESDAY
January 25, 1916

SIDELIGHTS ON THE NEWS OF THE DAY AS GATHERED BY THE EVER-PRESENT CAMERA MAN

RECRUITING STATION FOR PENNSYLVANIA WOMEN'S DIVISION FOR NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS OPENED IN WIDENER BUILDING. Justice Robert von Muschzisker is speaking, after being introduced by John C. Bell, who is seated on the other side. The aim of the organization is to obtain the names of women willing to enlist as nurses or to open their homes to the wounded in case of "emergency."

GIRLS AND BOYS WHO MAKE OUR CAPS ARE ON STRIKE. Here are the 200 young strikers holding a mass-meeting at their headquarters on North 9th street. They are being addressed by their organizer, Mrs. Ella Reeve Bloor, before going on picket duty.

Photo by Bain

STARS AT INSURANCE WRITING. Miss Jenny Watkins is the only member of the big New York insurance club composed only of agents who write $200,000 worth of business a year. She has been only five years at it, too.

Photo by International Film Service

A MAGNATE AT HIS LEISURE. Here is Henry Clay Frick, the Pittsburgh financier, as he appears during his off hours on the links at Palm Beach, where winter golfers are gathered.

Photo by Harris & Ewing

HE OPENS THE PRESIDENT'S MAIL. When you indite your complaint and send it to the White House, here is the man who will see it first. His name is Ira Smith. He sees to it that only a very few very personal letters reach the President's eye.

SHE KNOWS HOW TO HANDLE LOBSTERS

Some persons think Miss Rose Sesendek, of Bookbinder's restaurant, in Walnut street, is the bravest girl in Philadelphia. It's not every person who will pick a lobster out of a barrel without a pair of tongs, but she does it many times a day.