Portraits of the Children of Prominent Persons Will Be Painted by Mr. Humphrey Moore. Other Matters

A NUMBER of women prominent in one child, Rosalind, Jr. They are livthe presence here of Mr. H. Humphrey Moore and have engaged the services of this celebrated portrait painter.

Mrs. Francis King Wainwright, of Bryn Mawr, has commissioned him to do a portrait of her young son, and Mrs. William H. Donner has ordered a portrait of her small child. Mr. Moore was obliged to give up his residence in Paris because of the war, and has come to a neutral atmosphere

Although he has not yet exhibited in this country, Mr. Moore is one of the most noted members of the Paris coterie of portrait painters, and is famed for his paintings of members of the royal family. Among those whom he has painted are portraits of Countess de Grendulain, a niece of the former Queen Isabella; the Countess de Chareaubriand, the Duke of Madrid, the Marquise de Vista Bella, the Countess de Mira, Count G. de Chassieud, and the daughter of the Marquis de Ravenel, Lolo Del Castillo.

There is no doubt as to the success of the huge ball given last evening by the Sam Riddles for their young cousin, Lisa Norris. The affair was one of the biggest of the senson, and was made especially notable by the entertainment provided for the one thousand guests. In the way of decorative schemes the floral display was perfectly gorgeous. Of course, Lisa is one of the most popular girls of her year, and we were not surprised to find ourselves walking through avenues of orchids and baby primroses, charming tributes to her popularity. There was one perfectly stunning thing in flowers, the lovellest or alds and forget-me-nots, winding their way through latticed columns, and at the top massed with pink roses and tied with innumerable strands of silvered

Mrs. Riddle, in mauve brocade and pearls, received the guests, and was assisted by Mrs. Norris, who was charmingly gowned in black jet and youth in her diaphanous tulle frock. with just a glint of silver here and there in its conv osition, and the huge bouquet of pink roses which she carried made a charming picture.

The restaurant was inclosed with myriad palms and ferns, and provided seats for the guests on one side only, the other side being given over to a buffet-like table, L in shape, from which supper was continually served. Smilax was wreathed about the table, encircling the tall silver vases which held a colorful array of spring flowers. The dancing was held in the ballroom downstairs, and in addition to the Ritz orchestra the band from the Crystal orchestra the band from the Crystal of Williamsport, who Room in New York played the last C. Emblek in Devon. whisper in foxtrots and onesteps. In the funior ballroom supper was served from a long buffet table; four huge silver vases, quite three feet in height, were filled with pink roses, affording the necessary tones of contrast, for everything else was green.

The special delight of the evening was the Neapolann Band in costume, which trummed away merrily during retta l the evening, interspersed with songs and dances. Charming little songs band made its appearance, and sang and played tunefully until morning.

Of course every one was there Before the ball the smartest little dinners were given. As a matter of actual fact, the Parisian Room downstairs at dinner time seemed to hold one big party, for every one knew every one else and visits were constantly being paid.

The Victor Mathers gave a big party which included the Craig Biddles, the Dal Dixons, Mrs. Dixon stunning in

Mr. and Mrs. McKean, Mrs. John R. Fell and Mr. Morris Gates made a foursome at dinner, Mrs. McKean wearing a most unusual frock of midnight blue sequins short in front, but having a long fishtail train floating from the back. Mrs. Fell was frocked in purple lisse, embellished with jet. The Harold Rosengartens, Miss Shields, Marian Dougherty, Billy Mc-Alcer and Harry Yarrow made up a small dinner party, and amongst those the Andrew Wheelers, Russell Tucker, the Charley Munns and Alexander Browns.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Jeffords ontertained the Walter Blabons, Miss Brinton, Ann Dobson, James K. Meticks and Mr. Brooke Baker, of Virginia.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Spencer Miller, 3d, entertained at their house before the half. Their guests included Helen Whitredge, of Baltimore; Sarah Franklin, Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Patton, William Adamson and Frederic Freeman.

Others who entertained at dinner were the Tom Ashtons, Mrs. Joseph Gazzam, the Evans Robertses, Gardiner Cassatts, George McFaddens, Alex Benson and the Chris Hagens.

In the matter of fracks, let me whisper that most of them were quite little girl frocks, extremely short, wide and round, and promising what one of the debs was overheard to say, "A tuture in ankles."

The numerous friends of Mrs. Hutchthen Scott, Jr., will be glad to hear of her recovery from her serious illness. I met Hutchy in town the other day, bing waylaid by his close friends who were congratulating him on Rosalind's sunvalencence. She was undoubtedly we of the most popular girls in town, and is considered one of the brightest said most interesting of the younger stons. She is unusually attractive sappearance, tall, with exquisite dark couring, and dresses in impeccable Usle. The death of her mother, Mrs.

The league is a national organization for young girls who, having completed their debutants winter, are anxious to interest themselves in some work of social service, such as hospitals, settlements, factories and organized charities. There are branches in most of the big cities of the United States. There is also a Canadian League, and even one in Holland.

The Philadelphia chapter thinks very well of itself, and is sure that it has every capacity for making the entertain-ment today a really artistic and beautiful affair. The league girls are not in the least modest about it; in fact, it is usually referred to as "the greatest show on earth." Barnum & Balley's not excepted. The girls are doing every inch of it themselves, from the making of the coatumes to the designing and actual painting of the scenery. "Just because we won't trust any one else," as they proudly say.

"The Ballet of Orlando" is laid in fourteenth century Italy, and the costumes are adapted from certain of the early Italian artists, such as Pisanello, Flerenzo di Lorenzo and Benozzo Gozzoli.
The scenery, on the other hand, is all that is most modern, and shows the influence of Leon Bakat's sumptuous and fantastic designs for stage settings.

The identity of Oriande, the hero of the occasion, is surrounded by all the glamour of mystery. So far no one can be induced to betray his identity, but there is some rumor that the part is to be taken by one of Philadelphia's most beautiful and charming young matrons, who has lately devoted much of her time to art.
