Women Writers Club

The history of Irish folk-lore, from the early days of the Celts, to the Celtic tales were gaunt skeletons in their big simplicity, down to the latter-day delicately woven fairy tales, with their pookas and banshees, was the subject of a charming talk given by Miss Gertrude M. O'Reilly, woman's page editor of the Public Ledger.

The Irish people, Miss O'Reilly declared, commonly supposed to be one of the most superstitious in the world, in reality have no superstitions at all. All of their "superstitions" have a sound, commonsense origin and are merely delicately embroidered with a cover of superstition in accordance with the habits of the people.

The attractive, soft tones of the speaker made her talk all the more enjoyable.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer will give a supper tonight at their home, 18th and Walnut streets, after the opera.
