

OLD PENN GRADUATES BACK TO CELEBRATE MIDWINTER FESTIVAL

More Than 1000 Graduates From All Parts of Country Here to Participate in Festivities

CONTINUES TOMORROW

Today is Alumni University Day at the University of Pennsylvania, the second to be observed. It is an important day in itself, but gains import in the minds of "old grads" and students as the forenoon of University Day, which will be celebrated tomorrow with J. Hay Brown, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, as orator at the exercises at the American Academy of Music.

Shortly before noon Provost Edgar Fahs Smith conducted University Chapel exercises in the old college chapel. This was followed by a luncheon in Houston Hall, where the subject of election of trustees was introduced by Edgingham B. Morris, '78.

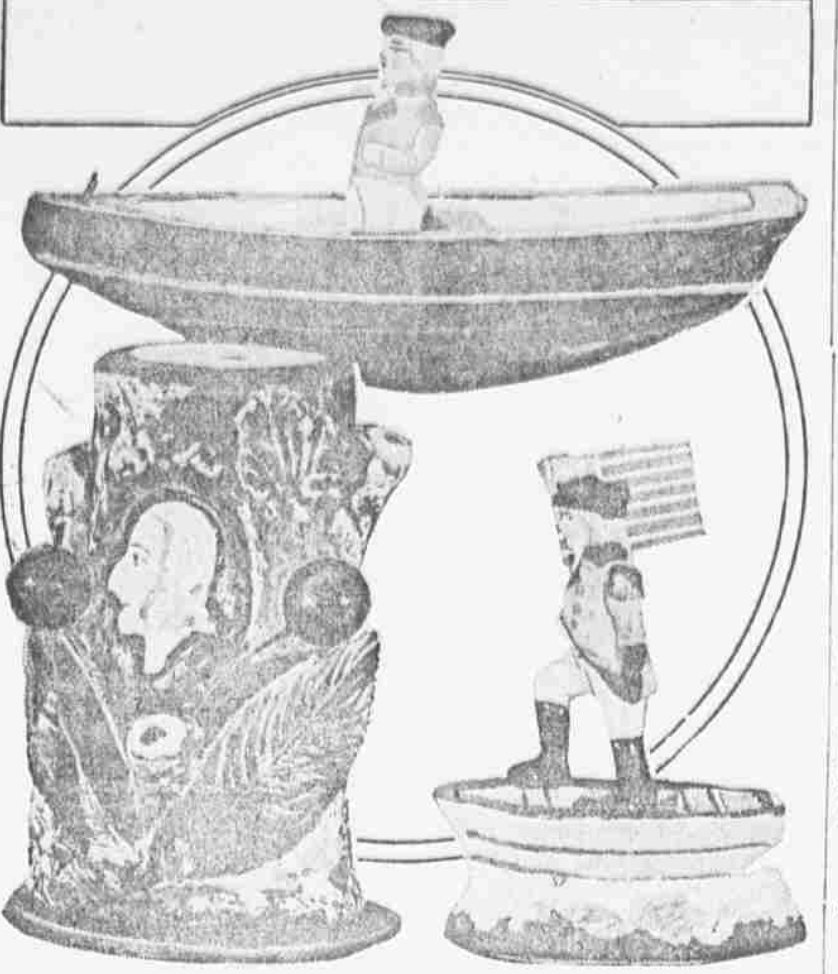

The University Day exercises at the Academy of Music, tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, will be marked by the presentation of several degrees and of an honorary degree to Chief Justice Brown. A portrait of the late J. Peter Lesley, former professor of geology and mining, will be presented by Prof. Amos P. Brown. It is the gift of Joseph G. Rosen, who was painted by Professor Lesley's daughter, Mrs. Margaret Lesley Bush-Brown.

The student body will assemble at Horticultural Hall at 3:30 p. m. and march to the Academy, followed by the provost, vice provost, trustees, the orators of the day and the faculty members.

Chief Justice Brown, immediately after receiving the honorary degree, will be introduced by Provost Smith, "Alma Mater" and "Hail, Pennsylvania," sung by the students, and numbers by the glee and mandolin clubs will compose the musical program.

Thomas B. Pritchett, '78 C., will be chief marshal. The associate marshals will be Walter E. Rex, '25; William A. Redding, '78 L.; Henry L. Geyelin, '77 C.; E. Spencer Miller, '80 C.; G. L. WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY NOVELTIES ARE ALL THE RAGE THIS YEAR

Dealers Swamped With Orders for Souvenirs to Celebrate Holiday in Commemoration of the Father of His Country

Fortunate it was that some paragrapher way back in the early days of the last century started, for lack of news, the story that George Washington incurred the stern displeasure of Father Washington by hitherto chopping down father's favorite cherry tree with his hatchet and receiving the usual punishment in lieu of the gratitude that should have been shown him. As with the other stories of George, there is a certain degree of romance between the beginning and the end.

"Father," sobbed George, as he rubbed the spot where the hatchet had descended. "I did it, I cannot tell a lie."

NOVELTIES THE VOICE. The hatchet still rules. But not far in the rear troop up scores of new things to aid in the celebration of the day.

Plaster stumps (painted, of course) of the tree that Washington hacked down, cotton and plaster cherries form the backbone of the novelties, but the sugar replica of the three-cornered Continental hat and the soldier himself standing in a wooden rowboat (it costs) bring something new to the fore.
