Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Ames Ballard Will Entertain This Evening for Miss Frances Stoughton and Their Son, Mr. Frederick Ballard

Rits Carlton, which will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Eilis Ames Ballard in honor of Frances Stoughton and their son, Frederick Ballard, whose engagement was announced last month.

Little Miss Stoughton is very pretty and very much liked by her own contemporaries as well as the older people. She is rather slight and very dark, with wavy hair and pretty coloring, and I think looks exceptionally well in sports clothes. The party tonight will be made up of the younger set principally.

the small brother of a future bride. It appears that sister will be married in the late summer or early fall and small brother has been encouraged to grow quite saint-like with the promise held over him that if he is good he may sit in the front pew at the wedding. Well, the other day small brother was very naughty and would not listen to reason at all, till finally his sister said to him; "Now, Willie, each time you are naughty you go back one pew for the wedding." He looked at her in abject grief and exclaimed straightway, "Oh, sister, don't my that; by the time you get married I'll not even be in the back pew, but out beyond the ferree."

pid you hear the awful experience of the Tilghmans last week? A maid suddenly went perfectly mad in the house and Gay says it took her and Rickie and two nurses and the doctor to hold her down. When first discovered she was racing about the house pouring libations of sherry out of a decanter ground the room to try to appeare the lower regions, so she said. Anyway, they had a most hectic time and finally had to send the poor soul to Mt. Hope. It must have been a flerce experience for them, don't you think?

maidens took to riding hobby horse at a recent meet in the country. There was an affair given out on the Reading and many people attended. This fair maid rode merrily off with the others and all went well till she came to a fence, which horsey took but failed to clear; and with the damsel on his back he balanced over the fence, for all the world like a rocking horse, till it broke under him, and he and the maiden rode on toward vic-
