Police Court Chronicles

Some day Bill Hedges hopes to becom an opera singer. His voice has a big range. He can sing tenor just as well range. He can sing tenor just as well as he sings bass and has volume to spare. But despite Bill's vocal qualifications his melody is not appreciated in the neighborhood of Frankford avenue and Letterly street.
On account of the noise in the day time due to the rattle of wagons and grinding of street cars Bill likes to practice at night. He has been so wrapped up in his art that he appeared to forget that many persons alept during this period. On two or three occasions the singer was re-quested to "move the show." By way of persuasion he was presented with hair brushes, stray glasses, odd cups and other things, most of which arrived from sec-ond-story windows.

Bill promptly attributed such actions to ignorance and in some cases he shattered the windows of those who thus expressed opinions. It is generally admitted that the singer has an abundance of volume, but there is some difference of opin-ion as to the quality of tone.

After many midnight battles, Hedges decided to go through his nightly practice on the placid waters of the Delaware. "There'll be no one around but the fish," he thought, "and they won't raise a kick So he unleashed his rowboat at Otis street he thought, "and they won't raise a kick." So he unleashed his rowboat at Otis street wharf and floated out over the stream. Songs of the deep and of the days when pirate kings ruled the waves was his favorite. But some one heard one of these selections and immediately concluded that it was a cry for help. A cop ran to Otis street wharf and was about to order a tug to the rescue when he spied Bills rowing placidly and singing a song of the sea As several tug host owners had been groused nightly by the river operathey commended the policoman when he took Bill to the poli they commended the policeman when he took Bill to the East Girard avenue sta-
